“PILL-DOCTOR HERDAL” is, as the observant reader will instantly perceive, rather a reverent attempt to tread in the footsteps of the Norwegian dramatist, than a version of any actually existing masterpiece. The author is conscious that his imitation is painfully lacking in the mysterious obscurity of the original, that the vein of allegorical symbolism is thinner throughout than it should be, and that the characters are not nearly so mad as persons invariably are in real life—but these are the faults inevitable to a 'prentice hand, and he trusts that due allowances may be made for them by the critical.

In conclusion he wishes to express his acknowledgments to Messrs. Bradbury and Agnew for their permission to reprint the present volume, the contents of which made their original appearance in the pages of "Punch."

ROSMERSHÖLM
Sitting-room at Rosmersholm, with a stove, flower-stand, windows, ancient and modern ancestors, doors, and everything handsome about it. Rebecca West is sitting knitting a large antimacassar which is nearly finished. Now and then she looks out of a window, and smiles and nods expectantly to someone outside. Madam Helseth is laying the table for supper.

Rebecca.

[Folding up her work slowly.] But tell me precisely, what about this white horse? [Smiling quietly.]
MADAM HELSETH.

Lord forgive you, Miss!—[fetching cruet-stand, and placing it on table]—but you’re making fun of me!

REBECCA.

[Gravely.] No, indeed. Nobody makes fun at Rosmersholm. Mr. Rosmer would not understand it. [Shutting window.] Ah, here is Rector Kroll. [Opening door.] You will stay to supper, will you not, Rector, and I will tell them to give us some little extra dish.

KROLL.

[Hanging up his hat in the hall.] Many thanks. [Wipes his boots.] May I come in? [Comes in, puts down his stick, sits down, and looks about him.] And how do you and Rosmer get on together, eh?

REBECCA.

Ever since your sister, Beata, went mad and jumped into the mill-race, we have been as happy as two little birds together. [After a pause, sitting down in arm-chair.] So you don't really mind my living here all alone with Rosmer? We were afraid you might, perhaps.

KROLL.

Why, how on earth—on the contrary, I shouldn't object at all if you—[looks at her meaningly]—h'm!

REBECCA.

[Interrupting, gravely.] For shame, Rector; how can you make such jokes?

KROLL.

[As if surprised.] Jokes! We do not joke in these parts—but here is Rosmer.

[Enter Rosmer, gently and softly.

ROSMER.

So, my dear old friend, you have come again, after a year's absence. [Sits down.] We almost thought that—
KROLL.

[Nods.] So Miss West was saying—but you are quite mistaken. I merely thought I might remind you, if I came, of our poor Beata’s suicide, so I kept away. We Norwegians are not without our simple tact.

Rosmer.

It was considerate—but unnecessary. Reb—I mean, Miss West—and I often allude to the incident, do we not?

Rebecca.

[Strikes Tändstickor.] Oh yes, indeed. [Lighting lamp.] Whenever we feel a little more cheerful than usual.

Kroll.

You dear good people! [Wanders up the room.] I came because the Spirit of Revolt has crept into my School. A Secret Society has existed for weeks in the Lower Third! To-day it has come to my knowledge that a booby trap was prepared for me by the hand of my own son, Laurits, and I then discovered that a hair had been inserted in my cane by my daughter Hilda! The only way in which a right-minded Schoolmaster can combat this anarchic and subversive spirit is to start a newspaper, and I thought that you, as a weak, credulous, inexperienced and impressionable kind of man, were the very person to be the Editor.

[Rebecca laughs softly, as if to herself. Rosmer jumps up and sits down again.]

Rebecca.

[With a look at Rosmer.] Tell him now!

Rosmer.

[Returning the look.] I can't—Some other evening. Well, perhaps— [To Kroll.] I can't be your Editor—because [in a low voice] I—I am on the side of Laurits and Hilda!

Kroll.

[Looks from one to the other, gloomily.] H'm!
Rosmer.

Yes. Since we last met, I have changed my views. I am going to create a new democracy, and awaken it to its true task of making all the people of this country noblemen, by freeing their wills, and purifying their minds!

Kroll.

What do you mean! [Takes up his hat.

Rosmer.

[Bowing his head.] I don't quite know, my dear friend; it was Reb—I should say Miss West's scheme.

Kroll.

H'm! [A suspicion appears in his face.] Now I begin to believe that what Beata said about schemes—no matter. But under the circumstances, I will not stay to supper.

[Takes up his stick, and walks out.]
Rosmer.

I told you he would be annoyed. I shall go to bed now. I don't want any supper. [He lights a candle, and goes out; presently his footsteps are heard overhead, as he undresses. Rebecca pulls a bell-ropes.

Rebecca.

[To Madam Helseth, who enters with dishes.] No, Mr. Rosmer will not have supper to-night. [In a lighter tone.] Perhaps he is afraid of the nightmare. There are so many sorts of White Horses in this world!

Madam Helseth.

[Shaking.] Lord! lord! that Miss West—the things she does say!

[Rebecca goes out through door, knitting antimacassar thoughtfully, as Curtain falls.]
ACT SECOND

Rosmer's study. Doors and windows, bookshelves, a writing-table. Door, with curtain, leading to Rosmer's bedroom. Rosmer discovered in a smoking jacket cutting a pamphlet with a paper-knife. There is a knock at the door. Rosmer says "Come in." Rebecca enters in a morning wrapper and curl-papers. She sits on a chair close to Rosmer, and looks over his shoulder as he cuts the leaves. Rector Kroll is shown up.

Kroll.

[Lays his hat on the table and looks at Rebecca from head to foot.] I am really afraid that I am in the way.
Rebecca.

[Surprised.] Because I am in my morning wrapper and curl-papers? You forget that I am emancipated, Rector Kroll.

[She leaves them and listens behind curtain in Rosmer's bedroom.

Rosmer.

Yes, Miss West and I have worked our way forward in faithful comradeship.

Kroll.

[Shakes his head at him slowly.] So I perceive. Miss West is naturally inclined to be forward. But, I say, really you know—— However, I came to tell you that poor Beata was not so mad as she looked, though flowers did bewilder her so. [Taking off his gloves meaningly.] She jumped into the mill-race because she had an idea that you ought to marry Miss West!
Rosmer.

[Jumps half up from his chair.] I? Marry—Miss West! My good gracious, Kroll! I don't understand, it is most incomprehensible. [Looks fixedly before him.] How can people?— [Looks at him for a moment, then rises.] Will you get out? [Still quiet and self-restrained.] But first tell me why you never mentioned this before?

Kroll.

Why? Because I thought you were both orthodox, which made all the difference. Now I know that you side with Laurits and Hilda, and mean to make the democracy into noblemen, and accordingly I intend to make it hot for you in my paper. Good morning!

[He slams the door with spite as Rebecca enters from bed-room.]

Rosmer.

[As if surprised.] You—in my bedroom! You have been listening, dear? But you are so emancipated.
"Taking off his gloves meaningly."
Ah, well! so our pure and beautiful friendship has been misinterpreted, bespattered! Just because you wear a morning wrapper, and have lived here alone for a year, people with coarse souls and ignoble eyes make unpleasant remarks! But what really did drive Beata mad? Why did she jump into the mill-race? I'm sure we did everything we could to spare her! I made it the business of my life to keep her in ignorance of all our interests—didn't I, now?

Rebecca.

You did. But why brood over it? What does it matter? Get on with your great beautiful task, dear—[approaching him cautiously from behind]—winning over minds and wills, and creating noblemen, you know—joyful noblemen!

Rosmer.

[Walking about restlessly, as if in thought.] Yes, I know. I have never laughed in the whole course of my life—we Rosmers don't—and so I felt that spreading gladness and light, and making the democracy joyful, was properly my mission. But now—I feel too upset to go on, Rebecca, unless— [Shakes his head heavily.] Yes, an idea has just occurred to me— [Looks at her, and then runs his hands through his hair]—Oh, my goodness! No—I can’t.

[He leans his elbows on table.]

Rebecca.

Be a free man to the full, Rosmer—tell me your idea.

Rosmer.

[Gloomily.] I don’t know what you’ll say to it. It’s this: Our platonic comradeship was all very well while I was peaceful and happy. Now that I am bothered and badgered, I feel—why, I can’t exactly explain, but I do feel that I must oppose a new and living reality to the gnawing memories of the past. I should perhaps, explain that this is equivalent to an Ibsenian proposal.
[Catches at the chairback with joy.] How? at last—a rise at last! [Recollects herself.] But what am I about? Am I not an emancipated enigma? [Puts her hands over her ears as if in terror.] What are you saying? You mustn’t. I can’t think what you mean. Go away, do!

Rosmer.

[Softly.] Be the new and living reality. It is the only way to put Beata out of the Saga. Shall we try it?

Rebecca.

Never! Do not—do not ask me why—for I haven’t a notion—but never! [Nods slowly to him and rises.] White Horses would not induce me! [With her hand on door-handle.] Now you know! [She goes out!]

Rosmer.

[Sits up, stares, thunderstruck, at the stove, and says to himself.] Well—I—am—

Quick Curtain.
ACT THIRD

Sitting-room at Rosmershölm. Sun shining outside in the Garden. Inside Rebecca West is watering a geranium with a small watering-pot. Her crochet antimacassar lies in the arm-chair. Madame Helseth is rubbing the chairs with furniture-polish from a large bottle. Enter Rosmer, with his hat and stick in his hand. Madame Helseth corks the bottle and goes out to the right.

Rebecca.

Good morning, dear. [A moment after—crocheting.] Have you seen Rector Kroll’s paper this morning? There’s something about you in it.

Rosmer.

Oh, indeed? [Puts down hat and stick, and takes up paper]. H'm! [Reads—then walks about the room.] Kroll has made it hot for me. [Reads some more.]
Oh, this is too bad! Rebecca, they do say such nasty spiteful things! they actually call me a renegade—and I can't think why! They mustn't go on like this. All that is good in human nature will go to ruin if they're allowed to attack an excellent man like me! Only think, if I can make them see how unkind they have been!

Rebecca.

Yes, dear, in that you have a great and glorious object to attain—and I wish you may get it!

Rosmer.

Thanks. I think I shall. [Happens to look through window and jumps.] Ah, no, I shan't—never now, I have just seen——

Rebecca.

Not the White Horse, dear? We must really not overdo that White Horse!
Rosmer.

No—the mill-race, where Beata—-[Puts on his hat—takes it off again.] I'm beginning to be haunted by—no, I don't mean the Horse—by a terrible suspicion that Beata may have been right after all! Yes, I do believe, now I come to think of it, that I must really have been in love with you from the first. Tell me your opinion.

Rebecca.

[Struggling with herself, and still crocheting.] Oh—I can't exactly say—such an odd question to ask me!

Rosmer.

[Shakes his head.] Perhaps; I have no sense of humour—no respectable Norwegian has—and I do want to know—because, you see, if I was in love with you, it was a sin, and if I once convinced myself of that—

[Wanders across the room.]
Rebecca

[Breaking out.] Oh, these old ancestral prejudices! Here is your hat, and your stick, too; go and take a walk.

[Rosmer takes hat and stick; first, then goes out and takes a walk; presently Madam Helseth appears, and tells Rebecca something. Rebecca tells her something. They whisper together. Madam Helseth nods, and shows in Rector Kroll, who keeps his hat in his hand, and sits on a chair.

Kroll.

I merely called for the purpose of informing you that I consider you an artful and designing person, but that, on the whole, considering your birth and moral antecedents, you know—[nods at her]—it is not surprising. [Rebecca walks about wringing her hands.] Why, what is the matter? Did you really not know that you had no right to your father's name? I'd no idea you would mind my mentioning such a trifle!

Rebecca.

[Breaking out.] I do mind. I am an emancipated enigma, but I retain a few little prejudices still. I don't like owning to my real age, and I do prefer to be legitimate. And, after your information—of which I was quite ignorant, as my mother, the late Mrs. Gamvik, never once alluded to it—I feel I must confess everything. Strong-minded advanced women are like that. Here is Rosmer. [Rosmer enters with his hat and stick.] Rosmer, I want to tell you and Rector Kroll a little story. Let us sit down, dear, all three of us. [They sit down, mechanically, on chairs.] A long time ago, before the play began—[in a voice scarcely audible]—in Ibsenite dramas, all the interesting things somehow do happen before the play begins—
Rosmer.

But, Rebecca, I know all this.

Kroll.

[Looks hard at her.] Perhaps I had better go?

Rebecca.

No—I will be short. This was it. I wanted to take my share in the life of the New Era, and march onward with Rosmer. There was one dismal, insurmountable barrier—[to Rosmer, who nods gravely]—Beata! I understood where your deliverance lay—and I acted. I drove Beata into the mill-race. . . . There!

Rosmer.

[After a short silence]. H’m! Well, Kroll—[takes up his hat]—if you’re thinking of walking home, I’ll go too. I’m going to be orthodox once more—after this!

Kroll.

[Severely and impressively, to Rebecca.] A nice sort of young woman you are! [Both go out hastily, without looking at Rebecca.]
[Speaks to herself, under her breath.] Now I have done it. I wonder why. [Pulls bell-rop.] Madam Helseth, I have just had a glimpse of two rushing White Horses. Bring down my hair-trunk.

[Enter Madam Helseth, with large hair-trunk, as Curtain falls.]
ACT FOUR

Late evening. Rebecca West stands by a lighted lamp, with a shade over it, packing sandwiches, &c., in a reticule, with a faint smile. The antimacassar is on the sofa. Enter Rosmer.

Rosmer.

[Seeing the sandwiches, &c.] Sandwiches? Then you are going! Why, on earth—I can't understand!

Rebecca.

Dear, you never can. Rosmersholm is too much for me. But how did you get on with Kroll?

Rosmer.

We have made it up. He has convinced me that the work of ennobling men was several sizes too large for me—so I am going to let it alone——
Rebecca.

[With her faint smile.] There I almost think, dear, that you are wise.

Rosmer.

[As if annoyed.] What, so you don’t believe in me either, Rebecca—you never did!

[Sits listlessly on chair.

Rebecca.

Not much, dear, when you are left to yourself—but I’ve another confession to make

Rosmer.

What, another? I really can’t stand any more confessions just now!

Rebecca.

[Sitting close to him.] It is only a little one. I bullied Beata into the mill-race—because of a wild uncontrollable—[Rosmer moves uneasily.] Sit still, dear—uncontrollable fancy—for you!
Rosmer.

[ Goes and sits on sofa. ] Oh, my goodness, Rebecca—you mustn't, you know!

[ He jumps up and down as if embarrassed. ]

Rebecca.

Don't be alarmed, dear, it is all over now. After living alone with you in solitude, when you showed me all your thoughts without reserve—little by little, somehow the fancy passed off. I caught the Rosmer view of life badly, and dulness descended on my soul as an extinguisher upon one of our Northern dips. The Rosmer view of life is ennobling, very—but hardly lively. And I've more yet to tell you.

Rosmer.

[ Turning it off. ] Isn't that enough for one evening?

Rebecca.

[ Almost voiceless. ] No, dear. I have a Past—behind me!
Rosmer.

Behind you? How strange. I had an idea of that sort already. [Starts, as if in fear.] A joke! [Sadly.] Ah, no—no, I must not give way to that! Never mind the Past, Rebecca; I once thought that I had made the grand discovery that, if one is only virtuous, one will be happy. I see now it was too daring, too original—an immature dream. What bothers me is that I can’t—somehow I can’t—believe entirely in you—I am not even sure that I have ennobled you so very much—isn’t it terrible?

Rebecca.

[Wringer her hands.] Oh, this killing doubt! [Looks darkly at him.] Is there anything I can do to convince you?

Rosmer.

[As if impelled to speak against his will.] Yes, one thing—only I’m afraid you wouldn’t see it in the same light. And yet I must mention it. It is like this.
"Oh, my goodness, Rebecca—you mustn't, you know!"
I want to recover faith in my mission, in my power to ennable human souls. And, as a logical thinker, this I cannot do now, unless—well, unless you jump into the mill-race, too, like Beata!

Rebecca.

[Takes up her antimacassar, with composure, and puts it on her head.] Anything to oblige you.

Rosmer.

[Springs up.] What? You really will! You are sure you don't mind? Then, Rebecca, I will go further. I will even go—yes—as far as you go yourself!

Rebecca.

[Bows her head towards his breast.] You will see me off? Thanks. Now you are indeed an Ibsenite.

[Smiles almost imperceptibly.

Rosmer.

[Cautiously.] I said as far as you go. I don't commit myself further than that. Shall we go?
Rebecca.

First tell me this. Are you going with me, or am I going with you?

Rosmer.

A subtle psychological point—but we have not time to think it out here. We will discuss it as we go along. Come!

[Rosmer takes his hat and stick, Rebecca her reticule, with sandwiches. They go out hand-in-hand through the door, which they leave open. The room (as is not uncommon with rooms in Norway) is left empty. Then Madam Helseth enters through another door.

Madam Helseth.

The cab, Miss—not here! [Looks out.] Out together—at this time of night—upon my—not on the garden seat? [Looks out of window.] My goodness! what is that white thing on the bridge—the Horse at last! [Shrieks aloud.] And those two sinful creatures running home!
Enter Rosmer and Rebecca, out of breath.

Rosmer.

[Scarcely able to get the words out.] It's no use, Rebecca—we must put it off till another evening. We can't be expected to jump off a footbridge which already has a White Horse on it. And if it comes to that, why should we jump at all? I know now that I really have ennobled you, which was all I wanted. What would be the good of recovering faith in my mission at the bottom of a mill-pond? No, Rebecca—[Lays his hand on her head]—there is no judge over us, and therefore——

Rebecca.

[Interrupting gravely.] We will bind ourselves over in our own recognisances to come up for judgment when called upon.

[Madam Helseth holds on to a chair-back.
Rebecca finishes the antimacassar calmly as Curtain falls.]
NORA; OR, THE BIRD-CAGE

(ET DIKKISVÖET)
NORA; OR, THE BIRD-CAGE
(ET DIKKISVÖET)

ACT FIRST

A room tastefully filled with cheap Art-furniture. Gimcracks in an étagere: a festoon of chenille monkeys hanging from the gaselier. Japanese fans, skeletons, cotton-wool spiders, frogs and lizards, scattered everywhere about. Drain-pipes with tall dyed grasses. A porcelain stove decorated with transferable pictures. Showily-bound books in book-case. Window. The Visitor's bell rings in the hall outside. The hall-door is heard to open, and then to shut. Presently Nora walks in with parcels; a porter carries a large Christmas-tree after her—which he puts down. Nora gives him a shilling—and he goes out grumbling.
Nora hums contentedly, and eats macaroons. Then Helmer puts his head out of his Manager's room, and Nora hides macaroons cautiously.

Helmer.

[Playfully.] Is that my little squirrel twittering—that my lark frisking in here?

Nora.

Ess! [To herself.] I have only been married eight years, so these marital amenities have not yet had time to pall!

Helmer.

[Threatening with his finger.] I hope the little bird has surely not been digging its beak into any macaroons, eh?

Nora.

[Bolting one, and wiping her mouth.] No, most certainly not. [To herself.] The worst of being so babyish is—one does have to tell such a lot of tara-diddles! [To Helmer.] See what I've bought—it's been such fun!

Helmer.

[Inspecting parcels.] H'm—rather an expensive little lark! [Takes her playfully by the ear.

Nora.

Little birds like to have a flutter occasionally. Which reminds me—[Plays with his coat-buttons.] I'm such a simple ickle sing—but if you are thinking of giving me a Christmas present, make it cash!

Helmer.

Just like your poor father, he always asked me to make it cash—he never made any himself! It's heredity, I suppose. Well—well!

[Goes back to his Bank. Nora goes on humming.]
Enter Mrs. Linden, doubtfully.

Nora.

What, Christina—why, how old you look! But then you are poor. I'm not. Torvald has just been made a Bank Manager. [Tidies the room.] Isn't it really wonderfully delicious to be well off? But of course, you wouldn't know. We were poor once, and, do you know, when Torvald was ill, I—[tossing her head]—though I am such a frivolous little squirrel, and all that, I actually borrowed £300 for him to go abroad. Wasn't that clever? Tra-la-la! I shan't tell you who lent it. I didn't even tell Torvald. I am such a mere baby I don't tell him everything. I tell Dr. Rank, though. Oh, I'm so awfully happy I should like to shout, "Dash it all!"

Mrs. Linden.

[Stroking her hair.] Do—it is a natural and innocent outburst—you are such a child! But I am a widow, and want employment. Do you think your husband could find me a place as clerk in his Bank?

[Proudly.] I am an excellent knitter!

Nora.

That would really be awfully funny. [To Helmer, who enters.] Torvald, this is Christina; she wants to be a clerk in your Bank—do let her! She thinks such a lot of you. [To herself.] Another taradiddle!

Helmer.

She is a sensible woman, and deserves encouragement. Come along, Mrs. Linden, and we'll see what we can do for you.

[He goes out through the hall with Mrs. Linden, and the front-door is heard to slam after them.

Nora.

[Opens door, and calls.] Now, Emmy, Ivar, and Bob, come in and have a romp with Mamma—we will play hide-and-seek. [She gets under the table, smiling in quiet satisfaction; Krogstad enters—Nora pounces out upon him.] Boo! ... Oh, I beg your pardon. I don't do this kind of thing generally—though I may be a little silly.

Krogstad.

[Politely.] Don't mention it. I called because I happened to see your husband go out with Mrs. Linden—from which, being a person of considerable penetration, I infer that he is about to give her my post at the Bank. Now, as you owe me the balance of £300, for which I hold your acknowledgment, you will see the propriety of putting a stop to this little game at once.

Nora.

But I don't at all—not a little wee bit! I'm so childish, you know—why should I?

[Sitting upright on carpet.

Krogstad.

I will try to make it plain to the meanest capacity. When you came to me for the loan, I naturally required some additional security. Your father, being a shady Government official, without a penny—for, if he had possessed one, he would presumably have left it to you—without a penny, then—I, as a cautious man of business, insisted upon having his signature as a surety. Oh, we Norwegians are sharp fellows!

Nora.

Well, you got papa's signature, didn't you?

Krogstad.

Oh, I got it right enough. Unfortunately, it was dated three days after his decease—now, how do you account for that?

Nora.

How? Why, as poor Papa was dead, and couldn't sign, I signed for him, that's all! Only somehow I forgot to put the date back. That's how. Didn't I tell you I was a silly, unbusiness like little thing? It's very simple.
Krogstad.

Very—but what you did amounts to forgery, notwithstanding. I happen to know, because I'm a lawyer, and have done a little in the forging way myself. So, to come to the point—if I get kicked out, I shall not go alone! [He bows, and goes out.

Nora.

It can't be wrong! Why, no one but Krogstad would have been taken in by it! If the Law says it's wrong, the Law's a goose—a bigger goose than poor little me even! [To Helmer, who enters.] Oh, Torvald, how you made me jump!

Helmer.

Has anybody called? [Nora shakes her head.] Oh, my little squirrel mustn't tell naughty whoppers. Why, I just met that fellow Krogstad in the hall. He's been asking you to get me to take him back—now, hasn't he?
NORA: OR, THE BIRD-CAGE

Nora.

[Walking about.] Do just see how pretty the Christmas-tree looks!

Helmer.

Never mind the tree—I want to have this out about Krogstad. I can’t take him back, because many years ago he forged a name. As a lawyer, a close observer of human nature, and a Bank Manager, I have remarked that people who forge names seldom or never confide the fact to their children—which inevitably brings moral contagion into the entire family. From which it follows, logically, that Krogstad has been poisoning his children for years by acting a part, and is morally lost. [Stretches out his hands to her.] I can’t bear a morally lost Bank-cashier about me!

Nora.

But you never thought of dismissing him till Christina came!
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

HELMER.

H'm! I've got some business to attend to—so good-bye, little lark! [Goes into office and shuts door.

NORA.

[Pale with terror.] If Krogstad poisons his children because he once forged a name, I must be poisoning Emmy, and Bob, and Ivar, because I forged papa's signature! [Short pause; she raises her head proudly.] After all, if I am a doll, I can still draw a logical inference! I mustn't play with the children any more—[hotly]—I don't care—I shall, though! Who cares for Krogstad?

[She makes a face, choking with suppressed tears, as Curtain falls.]
ACT SECOND

The room, with the cheap Art-furniture as before—except that the candles on the Christmas tree have guttered down and appear to have been lately blown out. The cotton-wool frogs and the chenille monkeys are disarranged, and there are walking things on the sofa. Nora alone.

Nora.

[Putting on a cloak and taking it off again.]
Bother Krogstad! There, I won't think of him. I'll only think of the costume ball at Consul Stenborg's, over-head, to-night, where I am to dance the Tarantella all alone, dressed as a Capri fisher-
So. It struck Torvald that, as I am a matron with three children, my performance might amuse the Consul's guests, and, at the same time, increase his connection at the Bank. Torvald is so practical.

[To Mrs. Linden, who comes in with a large cardboard box.] Ah, Christina, so you have brought in my old costume? Would you mind, as my husband's new Cashier, just doing up the trimming for me?

Mrs. Linden.

Not at all—is it not part of my regular duties? [Sewing.] Don't you think, Nora, that you see a little too much of Dr. Rank?

Nora.

Oh, I couldn't see too much of Dr. Rank! He is so amusing—always talking about his complaints, and heredity, and all sorts of indescribably funny things. Go away now, dear; I hear Torvald.

[Mrs. Linden goes. Enter Torvald from the Manager's room. Nora runs trippingly to him.]
Nora.

[Coaxing.] Oh, Torvald, if only you won't dismiss Krogstad, you can't think how your little lark would jump about and twitter.

Helmer.

The inducement would be stronger but for the fact that, as it is, the little lark is generally engaged in that particular occupation. And I really must get rid of Krogstad. If I didn't, people would say I was under the thumb of my little squirrel here, and then Krogstad and I knew each other in early youth; and when two people knew each other in early youth — [a short pause] — h'm! Besides, he will address me as, “I say, Torvald” — which causes me most painful emotion! He is tactless, dishonest, familiar, and morally ruined — altogether not at all the kind of person to be a Cashier in a Bank like mine.

Nora.

But he writes in scurrilous papers — he is on the staff of the Norwegian Punch. If you dismiss him, he may write nasty things about you, as wicked people did about poor dear papa!

HELMER.

Your poor dear papa was not impeccable—far from it. I am—which makes all the difference. I have here a letter giving Krogstad the sack. One of the conveniences of living close to the Bank is, that I can use the housemaids as Bank-messengers. [Goes to door and calls.] Ellen! [Enter parlourmaid.] Take that letter—there is no answer. [ELLEN takes it and goes.] That's settled—and now, Nora, as I am going to my private room, it will be a capital opportunity for you to practise the tambourine—thump away, little lark, the doors are double!

[Nods to her and goes in, shutting door.

NORA.

[Stroking her face.] How am I to get out of this mess? [A ring at the visitors' bell.] Dr. Rank's ring!
"A poor fellow with both feet in the grave is not the best authority on the fit of silk stockings."
He shall help me out of it! [Dr. Rank appears in doorway, hanging up his great-coat.] Dear Dr. Rank, how are you? [Takes both his hands.

Dr. Rank.

[Sitting down near the stove.] I am a miserable, hypochondriacal wretch—that's what I am. And why am I doomed to be dismal? Why? Because my father died of a fit of the blues! Is that fair—I put it to you?

Nora.

Do try to be funnier than that! See, I will show you the flesh-coloured silk tights that I am to wear to-night—it will cheer you up. But you must only look at the feet—well, you may look at the rest if you're good. Aren't they lovely? Will they fit me, do you think?

Dr. Rank.

[Gloomily.] A poor fellow with both feet in the grave is not the best authority on the fit of silk stockings. I shall be food for worms before long—I know I shall!
Nora.

You mustn't really be so frivolous! Take that! [She hits him lightly on the ear with the stockings; then hums a little.] I want you to do me a great service, Dr. Rank. [Rolling up stockings.] I always liked you. I love Torvald most, of course—but, somehow, I'd rather spend my time with you—you are so amusing!

Rank.

If I am, can't you guess why? [A short silence.] Because I love you! You can't pretend you didn't know it!

Nora.

Perhaps not—but it was really too clumsy of you to mention it just as I was about to ask a favour of you! It was in the worst taste! [With dignity.] You must not imagine because I joke with you about silk stockings, and tell you things I never tell Torvald, that I am therefore without the most delicate and scrupulous self-respect! I am really quite a good little doll, Dr. Rank, and now—[sits in rocking chair and smiles]—now I shan't ask you what I was going to!

[NORA]

[Ellen comes in with a card.]

Nora.

[Terrified.] Oh, my goodness!

[Put it in her pocket.]

Dr. Rank.

Excuse my easy Norwegian pleasantries—but—h'm—anything disagreeable up?

Nora.

[To herself.] Krogstad's card! I must tell another whopper! [To Rank.] No, nothing—only—only my new costume. I want to try it on here. I always do try on my dresses in the drawing-room—it's cosier, you know. So go in to Torvald and amuse him till I'm ready.

[RANK goes into HELMER'S room, and NORA bolts the door upon him, as KROGSTAD enters from hall in a fur cap.]
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

KROGSTAD.

Well, I've got the sack, and so I came to see how you are getting on. I mayn't be a nice man, but—[with feeling]—I have a heart! And, as I don't intend to give up the forged I.O.U. unless I'm taken back, I was afraid you might be contemplating suicide, or something of that kind; and so I called to tell you that, if I were you, I wouldn't. Bad thing for the complexion, suicide—and silly, too, because it wouldn't mend matters in the least. [Kindly.] You must not take this affair too seriously, Mrs. Helmer. Get your husband to settle it amicably by taking me back as Cashier; then I shall soon get the whip-hand of him, and we shall all be as pleasant and comfortable as possible together!

NORA.

Not even that prospect can tempt me! Besides, Torvald wouldn't have you back at any price now!
Krogstad.

All right, then. I have here a letter, telling your husband all. I will take the liberty of dropping it in the letter-box at your hall-door as I go out. I'll wish you good evening!

[He goes out; presently the dull sound of a thick letter dropping into a wire box is heard.]

Nora.

[Softly, and hoarsely.] He's done it! How am I to prevent Torvald from seeing it?

Helmer.

[Inside the door, rattling.] Hasn't my lark changed its dress yet? [Nora unbolts door.] What—so you are not in fancy costume, after all? [Enters with Rank.] Are there any letters for me in the box there?

Nora.

[Voicelessly.] None—not even a postcard! Oh,
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

Torvald, don't, please, go and look—promise me you won't! I do assure you there isn't a letter! And I've forgotten the Tarantella you taught me—do let's run over it. I'm so afraid of breaking down—promise me not to look at the letter-box. I can't dance unless you do.

Helmer.

[Standing still, on his way to the letter-box.] I am a man of strict business habits, and some powers of observation; my little squirrel's assurances that there is nothing in the box, combined with her obvious anxiety that I should not go and see for myself, satisfy me that it is indeed empty, in spite of the fact that I have not invariably found her a strictly truthful little dicky-bird. There—there. [Sits down to piano.] Bang away on your tambourine, little squirrel—dance away, my own lark!

Nora.

[Dancing, with a long gay shawl.] Just won't the little squirrel! Faster—faster! Oh, I do feel so gay! We will have some champagne for dinner, won’t we, Torvald?

[Dances with more and more abandonment.

Helmer.

[After addressing frequent remarks in correction.] Come, come—not this awful wildness! I don’t like to see quite such a larky little lark as this. . . . . Really it is time you stopped!

Nora.

[Her hair coming down as she dances more wildly still, and swings the tambourine.] I can’t. . . . . I can’t! [To herself, as she dances.] I’ve only thirty-one hours left to be a bird in; and after that—[shuddering]—after that, Krogstad will let the cat out of the bag!

Curtain.
ACT THIRD

The same room—except that the sofa has been slightly moved, and one of the Japanese cotton-wool frogs has fallen into the fire-place. Mrs. Linden sits and reads a book—but without understanding a single line.

Mrs. Linden.

[Laying down her book, as a light tread is heard outside.] Here he is at last! [Krogstad comes in, and stands in the doorway.] Mr. Krogstad, I have given you a secret rendezvous in this room, because it belongs to my employer, Mr. Helmer, who has lately discharged you. The etiquette of Norway permits these slight freedoms on the part of a female cashier.

Krogstad.

It does. Are we alone? [Nora is heard overhead dancing the Tarantella.] Yes, I hear Mrs. Helmer's fairy footfall above. She dances the Tarantella now—by-and-by she will dance to another tune! [Changing his tone.] I don't exactly know why you should wish to have this interview—after jilting me as you did, long ago, though?

Mrs. Linden.

Don't you? I do. I am a widow—a Norwegian widow. And it has occurred to me that there may be a nobler side to your nature somewhere—though you have not precisely the best of reputations

Krogstad.

Right. I am a forger, and a money-lender; I am on the staff of the Norwegian Punch—a most scurrilous paper. More, I have been blackmailing
Mrs. Helmer by trading on her fears, like a low cowardly cur. But, in spite of all that—[clasping his hands]—there are the making of a fine man about me yet, Christina!

Mrs. Linden.

I believe you—at least, I'll chance it. I want some one to care for, and I'll marry you.

Krogstad.

[Suspiciously.] On condition, I suppose, that I suppress the letter denouncing Mrs. Helmer?

Mrs. Linden.

How can you think so? I am her dearest friend; but I can still see her faults, and it is my firm opinion that a sharp lesson will do her all the good in the world. She is much too comfortable. So leave the letter in the box, and come home with me.

Krogstad.

I am wildly happy! Engaged to the female cashier of the manager who has discharged me, our future is bright and secure!

He goes out; and Mrs. Linden sets the furniture straight; presently a noise is heard outside, and Helmer enters, dragging Nora in. She is in fancy dress, and he in an open black domino.

Nora.

I shan’t! It’s too early to come away from such a nice party. I won’t go to bed! [She whimpers.

Helmer.

[Tenderly.] There’sh a naughty lil’ larkie for you,
Mrs. Linen! Poshtively had to drag her ’way!
She’sh a capricious lil’ girl—from Capri. ’Scuse me!
—’fraid I’ve been and made a pun. Shan’ ’cur again! Shplendid champagne the Consul gave us—
’counts for it! [Sits down smiling.] Do you knit,
’Broider. [Nodding to her, solemnly.] ’Member that.
Alwaysh 'broider. More—[hiccoughing]—Oriental! Gobblesh you!—goo'ni!

Mrs. Linden.

I only came in to—to see Nora's costume. Now I've seen it, I'll go. [Goes out.

Helmer.

Awful bore that woman—hate boresh! [Looks at Nora, then comes nearer.] Oh, you prillil squillikins, I do love you so! Shomehow, I feel sho lively thishevenin'!

Nora.

[Goes to other side of table.] I won't have all that, Torvald!

Helmer.

Why? ain't you my lil' lark—ain't thisth our lil' cage? Ver-well, then. [A ring.] Rank! confound it all! [Enter Dr. Rank.] Rank, dear old boy, you've been [hiccoughs] going it upstairs. Cap'tal champagne, eh? 'Shamed of you, Rank!

[He sits down on sofa, and closes his eyes gently.]
"Oh, you prillil squillikins!"

Dr. Rank.

Did you notice it? [With pride.] It was almost incredible the amount I contrived to put away. But I shall suffer for it to-morrow. [Gloomily.] Heredity again! I wish I was dead! I do.

Nora.

Don’t apologise. Torvald was just as bad; but he is always so good-tempered after champagne.

Doctor Rank.

Ah, well, I just looked in to say that I haven’t long to live. Don’t weep for me, Mrs. Helmer, it’s chronic—and hereditary too. Here are my P.P.C. cards. I’m a fading flower. Can you oblige me with a cigar?

Nora.

[With a suppressed smile.] Certainly. Let me give you a light?

[Doctor Rank lights his cigar, after several ineffectual attempts, and goes out.]
Helmer.

[Compassionately.] Poo' old Rank—he'sh very bad to-ni'! [Pulls himself together.] But I forgot—Bishness—I mean, bu-si-ness—mush be 'tended to. I'll go and see if there are any letters. [Goes to box.] Hallo! some one's been at the lock with a hairpin—it's one of your hairpins! [Holding it out to her.

Nora.

[Quickly.] Not mine—one of Bob's, or Ivar's—they both wear hairpins!

Helmer.

[Turning over letters absently.] You must break them of it—bad habit! What a lot o' lettersh! double usual quantity. [Opens Krogstad's.] By Jove! [Reads it and falls back completely sobered.] What have you got to say to this?

Nora.

[Crying aloud.] You shan't save me—let me go! I won't be saved!
Helmer.

Save you, indeed! Who's going to save Me? You miserable little criminal. [Annoyed.] Ugh—ugh!

Nora.

[With hardening expression.] Indeed, Torvald, your singing-bird acted for the best!

Helmer.

Singing-bird! Your father was a rook—and you take after him. Heredity again! You have utterly destroyed my happiness. [Walks round several times.] Just as I was beginning to get on, too!

Nora.

I have—but I will go away and jump into the water.

Helmer.

What good will that do me? People will say I had a hand in this business. [Bitterly.] If you must forge, you might at least put your dates in correctly! But you never had any principle! [A ring.] The front-door bell! [A fat letter is seen to fall into the box; Helmer takes it, opens it, sees enclosure, and embraces Nora.] Krogstad won't split. See, he returns the forged I.O.U.! Oh, my poor little lark, what you must have gone through! Come under my wing, my little scared song-bird. . . . Eh? you won't! Why, what's the matter now?

Nora.

[With cold calm.] I have wings of my own, thank you, Torvald, and I mean to use them!

Helmer.

What—leave your pretty cage, and [pathetically] the old cock bird, and the poor little innocent eggs!

Nora.

Exactly. Sit down, and we will talk it over first. [Slowly.] Has it ever struck you that this is the first time you and I have ever talked seriously together about serious things?
HELMER.

Come, I do like that! How on earth could we talk about serious things when your mouth was always full of macaroons?

NORA.

[Shakes her head.] Ah, Torvald, the mouth of a mother of a family should have more solemn things in it than macaroons! I see that now, too late. No, you have wronged me. So did papa. Both of you called me a doll, and a squirrel, and a lark! You might have made something of me—and instead of that, you went and made too much of me—oh, you did!

HELMER.

Well, you didn’t seem to object to it, and really I don’t exactly see what it is you do want!

NORA.

No more do I—that is what I have got to find out. If I had been properly educated, I should have known better than to date poor papa's signature three days after he died. Now I must educate myself. I have to gain experience, and get clear about religion, and law, and things, and whether Society is right or I am—and I must go away and never come back any more till I am educated!

Helmer.

Then you may be away some little time? And what's to become of me and the eggs meanwhile?

Nora.

That, Torvald, is entirely your own affair. I have a higher duty than that towards you and the eggs. [Looking solemnly upward.] I mean my duty towards Myself!

Helmer.

And all this because—in a momentary annoyance at finding myself in the power of a discharged cashier who calls me "I say, Torvald," I expressed myself with ultra-Gilbertian frankness! You talk like a silly child!
Nora.

Because my eyes are opened, and I see my position with the eyes of Ibsen. I must go away at once, and begin to educate myself.

Helmer.

May I ask how you are going to set about it?

Nora.

Certainly. I shall begin—yes, I shall begin with a course of the Norwegian theatres. If that doesn’t take the frivolity out of me, I don’t really know what will! [She gets her bonnet and ties it tightly.

Helmer.

Then you are really going? And you’ll never think about me and the eggs any more! Oh, Nora!

Nora.

Indeed, I shall—occasionally—as strangers.

[She puts on a shawl sadly, and fetches her dressing-bag.]
If I ever do come back, the greatest miracle of all will have to happen. Good-bye!

[She goes out through the hall; the front door is heard to bang loudly.

Helmer.

[Sinking on a chair.] The room empty? Then she must be gone! Yes, my little lark has flown! [The dull sound of an unskilled latchkey is heard trying the lock; presently the door opens, and Nora, with a somewhat foolish expression, reappears.] What? back already! Then you are educated?

Nora.

[Puts down dressing-bag.] No, Torvald, not yet. Only, you see, I found I had only threepence-halfpenny in my purse, and the Norwegian theatres are all closed at this hour—and so I thought I wouldn’t leave the cage till to-morrow—after breakfast.

Helmer.

[As if to himself.] The greatest miracle of all has happened. My little bird is not in the bush just yet!

[Nora takes down a showily-bound dictionary from the shelf and begins her education; Helmer fetches a bay of macaroons, sits near her, and tenders one humbly. A pause. Nora repulses it, proudly. He offers it again. She snatches at it suddenly, still without looking at him, and nibbles it thoughtfully as Curtain falls.
HEDDA GABLER
HEDDA GABLER

ACT FIRST

Scene—A sitting-room cheerfully decorated in dark colours. Broad doorway, hung with black crape, in the wall at back, leading to a back drawing-room, in which, above a sofa in black horsehair, hangs a posthumous portrait of the late General Gabler. On the piano is a handsome pall. Through the glass panes of the back drawing-room window are seen a dead wall and a cemetery. Settees, sofas, chairs, &c., handsomely upholstered in black bombazine, and studded with small round nails. Bouquets of immortelles and dead grasses are lying everywhere about.
Enter Aunt Julie (a good-natured-looking lady in a smart hat.)

Aunt Julie.

Well, I declare, if I believe George or Hedda are up yet! [Enter George Tesman, humming, stout, careless, spectacled.] Ah, my dear boy, I have called before breakfast to inquire how you and Hedda are after returning late last night from your long honeymoon. Oh, dear me, yes; am I not your old aunt, and are not these attentions usual in Norway?

George.

Good Lord, yes! My six months' honeymoon has been quite a little travelling scholarship, eh? I have been examining archives. Think of that! Look here, I'm going to write a book all about the domestic interests of the Cave-dwellers during the Deluge. I'm a clever young Norwegian man of letters, eh?
Aunt Julie.

Fancy your knowing about that too! Now, dear me, thank Heaven!

George.

Let me, as a dutiful Norwegian nephew, untie that smart, showy hat of yours. [Unties it, and pats her under the chin.] Well, to be sure, you have got yourself really up—fancy that!

[He puts hat on chair close to table.

Aunt Julie.

[Giggling.] It was for Hedda's sake—to go out walking with her in. [Hedda approaches from the back-room; she is pallid, with cold, open, steel-grey eyes; her hair is not very thick, but what there is of it is an agreeable medium brown.] Ah, dear Hedda!

[She attempts to cuddle her.

Hedda.

[Shrinking back.] Ugh, let me go, do! [Looking at Aunt Julie's hat.] Tesman, you must really tell the housemaid not to leave her old hat about on the drawing-room chairs. Oh, is it your hat? Sorry I spoke, I'm sure!

AUNT JULIE.

[Annoyed.] Good gracious, little Mrs. Hedda; my nice new hat that I bought to go out walking with you in!

GEORGE.

[Putting her on the back.] Yes, Hedda, she did, and the parasol too! Fancy, Aunt Julie always positively thinks of everything, eh?

HEDDA.

[Coldly.] You hold your tongue. Catch me going out walking with your aunt! One doesn't do such things.

GEORGE.

[Beaming.] Isn't she a charming woman? Such fascinating manners! My goodness, eh? Fancy that!
Aunt Julie.

Ah, dear George, you ought indeed to be happy—but [brings out a flat package wrapped in newspaper] look here, my dear boy!

George.

[Opens it.] What? my dear old morning shoes! my slippers! [Breaks down.] This is positively too touching, Hedda, eh? Do you remember how badly I wanted them all the honeymoon? Come and just have a look at them—you may!

Hedda.

Bother your old slippers and your old aunt too! [Aunt Julie goes out annoyed, followed by George, still thanking her warmly for the slippers; Hedda yawns; George comes back and places his old slippers reverently on the table.] Why, here comes Mrs Elvsted—another early caller! She had irritating hair, and went about making a sensation with it—an old flame of yours, I've heard.

Enter Mrs. Elvsted; she is pretty and gentle, with copious wavy white-gold hair and round prominent eyes, and the manner of a frightened rabbit.

Mrs. Elvsted.

*[Nervous.] Oh, please, I'm so perfectly in despair. Ejlert Lövborg, you know, who was our tutor; he's written such a large new book. I inspired him. Oh, I know I don't look like it—but I did—he told me so. And, good gracious! now he's in this dangerous wicked town all alone, and he's a reformed character, and I'm so frightened about him; so, as the wife of a sheriff twenty years older than me, I came up to look after Mr. Lövborg. Do ask him here—then I can meet him. You will? How perfectly lovely of you! My husband's so fond of him!

Hedda.

George, go and write an invitation at once; do you hear? [George looks around for his slippers, takes them up and goes out.] Now we can talk, my little Thea. Do you remember how I used to pull your hair when we met on the stairs, and say I would scorch it off? Seeing people with copious hair always does irritate me.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Goodness, yes, you were always so playful and friendly, and I was so afraid of you. I am still. And please, I’ve run away from my husband. Everything around him was distasteful to me. And Mr. Lövborg and I were comrades—he was dissipated, and I got a sort of power over him, and he made a real person out of me—which I wasn’t before, you know; but, oh, I do hope I’m real now. He talked to me and taught me to think—chiefly of him. So, when Mr. Lövborg came here, naturally I came too. There was nothing else to do! And fancy, there is another woman whose shadow still stands between him and me! She wanted to shoot him once, and so, of course, he can never forget her. I wish I knew her name—perhaps it was that red-haired opera-singer?

Hedda.

[With cold self-command.] Very likely—but nobody does that sort of thing here. Hush! Run away now. Here comes Tesman with Judge Brack. [Mrs. Elvsted goes out; George comes in with Judge Brack, who is a short and elastic gentleman, with a round face, carefully brushed hair, and distinguished profile.] How awfully funny you do look by daylight, Judge!

Brack.

[holding his hat and dropping his eye-glass.] Sincerest thanks. Still the same graceful manners, dear little Mrs. Hed—Tesman! I came to invite dear Tesman to a little bachelor-party to celebrate his return from his long honeymoon. It is customary in Scandinavian society. It will be a lively affair, for I am a gay Norwegian dog.
"I am a gay Norwegian dog."
GEORGE.

Asked out—without my wife! Think of that! Eh? Oh, dear me, yes, I'll come!

BRACK.

By the way, Lövborg is here; he has written a wonderful book, which has made a quite extraordinary sensation. Bless me, yes!

GEORGE.

Lövborg—fancy! Well, I am—glad. Such marvellous gifts! And I was so painfully certain he had gone to the bad. Fancy that, eh? But what will become of him now, poor fellow, eh? I am so anxious to know!

BRACK.

Well, he may possibly put up for the Professorship against you, and, though you are an uncommonly clever man of letters—for a Norwegian—it's not wholly improbable that he may cut you out!
George.

But, look here, good Lord, Judge Brack!—[gesticulating]—that would show an incredible want of consideration for me! I married on my chance of getting that professorship. A man like Lövborg, too, who hasn't even been respectable, eh? One doesn't do such things as that!

Brack.

Really? You forget we are all realistic and unconventional persons here, and do all kinds of odd things. But don't worry yourself! [He goes out.

George.

[To Hedda.] Oh, I say, Hedda, what's to become of our fairyland now, eh? We can't have a liveried servant, or give dinner parties, or have a horse for riding. Fancy that!

Hedda.

[Slowly, and wearily.] No, we shall really have to set up as fairies in reduced circumstances, now.
George.

[Cheering up.] Still, we shall see Aunt Julie every day, and that will be something, and I've got back my old slippers. We shan't be altogether without some amusements, eh?

Hedda.

[Crosses the floor.] Not while I have one thing to amuse myself with, at all events.

George.

[Beaming with joy.] Oh, Heaven be praised and thanked for that! My goodness, so you have! And what may that be, Hedda, eh?

Hedda.

[At the doorway, with suppressed scorn.] Yes, George you have the old slippers of the attentive aunt, and I have the horse-pistols of the deceased general!

George.

[In an agony.] The pistols! Oh, my goodness! what pistols?
Hedda.

[With cold eyes.] General Gabler's pistols—same which I shot—[recollecting herself]—no, that's Thackeray, not Ibsen—a very different person.

[She goes through the back drawing-room.

George.

[At doorway, shouting after her.] Dearest Hedda, not those dangerous things, eh? Why, they have never once been known to shoot straight yet! Don't! Have a catapult. For my sake, have a catapult!

[Curtain.
ACT SECOND

Scene—The cheerful dark drawing-room. It is afternoon. Hedda stands loading a revolver in the back drawing-room.

Hedda.

Brack.

[Entering.] What the devil! Do you usually take pot-shots at casual visitors? [Annoyed.

Hedda.

Invariably, when they come by the back-garden. It is my unconventional way of intimating that I am at home. One does do these things in realistic dramas, you know. And I was only aiming at the blue sky.

Brack.

Which accounts for the condition of my hat. [Exhibiting it.] Look here—riddled!

Hedda.

Couldn't help myself. I am so horribly bored with Tesman. Everlastingly to be with a professional person!

Brack.

*[Sympathetically.] Our excellent Tesman is certainly a bit of a bore. [Looks searchingly at her.] What on earth made you marry him?

Hedda.

Tired of dancing, my dear, that's all. And then I used Tesman to take me home from parties; and we saw this villa; and I said I liked it, and so did he; and so we found some common ground, and here we are, do you see! And I loathe Tesman, and I don’t even like the villa now; and I do feel the want of an entertaining companion so!

Brack.

Try me. Just the kind of three-cornered arrangement that I like. Let me be the third person in the compartment—[confidentially]—the tried friend, and, generally speaking, cock of the walk!

Hedda.

[Audibly drawing in her breath.] I cannot resist your polished way of putting things. We will conclude a triple alliance. But hush!—here comes Tesman.

Enter George with a number of books under his arm.

George.

Puff! I am hot, Hedda. I’ve been looking into Lövborg’s new book. Wonderfully thoughtful—confound him! But I must go and dress for your party, Judge. [He goes out.]
Hedda.

I wish I could get Tesman to take to politics, Judge. Couldn't he be a Cabinet Minister, or something?

Brack.

H'm!

[A short pause; both look at one another, without speaking. Enter George, in evening dress with gloves.

George.

It is afternoon, and your party is at half-past seven—but I like to dress early. Fancy that! And I am expecting Lövborg.

Ejlert Lövborg comes in from the hall; he is worn and pale, with red patches on his cheek-bones, and wears an elegant perfectly new visiting-suit and black gloves.

George.

Welcome! [Introduces him to Brack.] Listen—I have got your new book, but I haven't read it through yet.
Lövborg.

You needn't—it's rubbish. [Takes a packet of MSS. out.] This isn't. It's in three parts; the first about the civilising forces of the future, the second about the future of the civilising forces, and the third about the forces of the future civilisation. I thought I'd read you a little of it this evening?

Brack and George.

[I Hastily.] Awfully nice of you—but there's a little party this evening—so sorry we can't stop! Won't you come too?

Hedda.

No, he must stop and read it to me and Mrs. Elvsted instead.

George.

It would never have occurred to me to think of such clever things! Are you going to oppose me for the professorship, eh?
Lövborg.

[Modestly.] No; I shall only triumph over you in the popular judgment—that's all!

George.

Oh, is that all? Fancy! Let us go into the back drawing-room and drink cold punch.

Lövborg.

Thanks—but I am a reformed character, and have renounced cold punch—it is poison.

[George and Brack go into the back-room and drink punch, whilst Hedda shows Lövborg a photograph album in the front.

Lövborg.

[Slowly, in a low tone.] Hedda Gabbler! how could you throw yourself away like this!—Oh, is that the Ortler Group? Beautiful!—Have you forgotten how we used to sit on the settee together behind an illustrated paper, and—yes, very picturesque peaks—I told you all about how I had been on the loose?
Hedda.

Now, none of that here! These are the Dolomites. —Yes, I remember; it was a beautiful fascinating Norwegian intimacy—but it's over now. See, we spent a night in that little mountain village, Tesman and I.

Lövborg.

Did you, indeed? Do you remember that delicious moment when you threatened to shoot me down? [Tenderly] I do!

Hedda.

[Carelessly.] Did I! I have done that to so many people. But now all that is past, and you have found the loveliest consolation in dear, good, little Mrs. Elvsted—ah, here she is! [Enter Mrs. Elvsted.] Now, Thea, sit down and drink up a good glass of cold punch. Mr. Lövborg is going to have some. If you don't, Mr. Lövborg, George and the Judge will think you are afraid of taking too much if you once begin.
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, please, Hedda! When I've inspired Mr. Lövborg so—good gracious! don't make him drink cold punch!

Hedda.

You see, Mr. Lövborg, our dear little friend can't trust you!

Lövborg.

So that is my comrade's faith in me! [Gloomily.] I'll show her if I am to be trusted or not. [He drinks a glass of punch.] Now I'll go to the Judge's party. I'll have another glass first. Your health, Thea! So you came up to spy on me, eh? I'll drink the Sheriff's health—everybody's health!

[He tries to get more punch.]

Hedda.

[Stopping him.] No more now. You are going to a party, remember.

George and Tesman come in from back-room.
Lövborg.

Don't be angry, Thea. I was fallen for a moment. Now I'm up again! [Mrs. Elsted beams with delight.] Judge, I'll come to your party, as you are so pressing, and I'll read George my manuscript all the evening. I'll do all in my power to make that party go!

George.

No? fancy! that will be amusing!

Hedda.

There, go away, you wild rollicking creatures! But Mr. Lövborg must be back at ten, to take dear Thea home!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, goodness, yes! [In concealed agony.] Mr. Lövborg, I shan't go away till you do!

[The three men go out laughing merrily; the Act-drop is lowered for a minute; when it is raised, it is 7 a.m., and Mrs. Elvsted and Hedda are discovered sitting up, with rugs around them.]
Mrs. Elvsted

[Wearily.] Seven in the morning, and Mr. Lövborg not here to take me home yet! what can he be doing?

Hedda.

[Yawning.] Reading to Tesman, with vine-leaves in his hair, I suppose. Perhaps he has got to the third part.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, do you really think so, Hedda. Oh, if I could but hope he was doing that!

Hedda.

You silly little ninny! I should like to scorch your hair off. Go to bed!

[Mrs. Elvsted goes. Enter George.

George.

I'm a little late, eh? But we made such a night of it. Fancy! It was most amusing. Ejlert read his book to me—think of that! Astonishing book!
Oh, we really had great fun! I wish I'd written it. Pity he's so irreclaimable.

Hedda.

I suppose you mean he has more of the courage of life than most people?

George.

Good Lord! He had the courage to get more drunk than most people. But, altogether, it was what you might almost call a Bacchanalian orgy. We finished up by going to have early coffee with some of these jolly chaps, and poor old Lövborg dropped his precious manuscript in the mud, and I picked it up—and here it is! Fancy if anything were to happen to it! He never could write it again. Wouldn't it be sad, eh? Don't tell any one about it.

[He leaves the packet of MSS. on a chair, and rushes out; Hedda hides the packet as Brack enters.]
Brack.

Another early call, you see! My party was such a singularly animated soirée that I haven't undressed all night. Oh, it was the liveliest affair conceivable! And, like a true Norwegian host, I tracked Lövborg home; and it is only my duty, as a friend of the house, and cock of the walk, to take the first opportunity of telling you that he finished up the evening by coming to mere loggerheads with a red-haired opera-singer, and being taken off to the police-station! Your mustn't have him here any more. Remember our little triple alliance!

Hedda.

[Her smile fading away.] You are certainly a dangerous person—but you must not get a hold over me!

Brack.

[Ambiguously.] What an idea! But I might—I am an insinuating dog. Good morning! [Goes out.]
Lövborg.

[Bursting in, confused and excited.] I suppose you've heard where I've been?

Hedda.

[Evasively.] I heard you had a very jolly party at Judge Brack's.

Mrs. Elvsted comes in.

Lövborg.

It's all over. I don't mean to do any more work. I've no use for a companion now, Thea. Go home to your sheriff!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Agitated.] Never! I want to be with you when your book comes out!

Lövborg.

It won't come out—I've torn it up! [Mrs. Elsted rushes out, wringing her hands.] Mrs. Tesman, I told her a lie—but no matter. I haven't torn my book up—I've done worse! I've taken it about to several parties, and it's been through a police-row with me—now I've lost it. Even if I found it again, it wouldn't be the same—not to me! I am a Norwegian literary man, and peculiar. So I must make an end of it altogether!

Hedda.

Quite so—but look here, you must do it beautifully. I don’t insist on your putting vine-leaves in your hair—but do it beautifully. [Fetches pistol.] See, here is one of General Gabler’s pistols—do it with that!

Lövborg.

Thanks!

[He takes the pistol, and goes out through the hall-door; as soon as he has gone, Hedda brings out the manuscript, and puts it on the fire, whispering to herself, as Curtain falls.]
"I am a Norwegian literary man, and peculiar."
ACT THREE

Scene.—The same room, but—it being evening—darker than ever. The crape curtains are drawn. A servant, with black ribbons in her cap, and red eyes, comes in and lights the gas quietly and carefully. Chords are heard on the piano in the back drawing-room. Presently Hedda comes in and looks out into the darkness. A short pause. Enter George Tesman.

George.

I am so uneasy about poor Lövborg. Fancy! he is not at home. Mrs. Elvsted told me he has been here early this morning, so I suppose you gave him back his manuscript, eh?
Hedda.

[Cold and immovable, supported by arm-chair.] No, I put it on the fire instead.

George.

On the fire! Lövborg’s wonderful new book that he read to me at Brack’s party, when we had that wild revelry last night! Fancy that! But, I say, Hedda—isn’t that rather—eh? Too bad, you know—really. A great work like that. How on earth did you come to think of it?

Hedda.

[Suppressing an almost imperceptible smile.] Well, dear George, you gave me a tolerably strong hint.

George.

Me? Well, to be sure—that is a joke! Why, I only said that I envied him for writing such a book, and it would put me entirely in the shade if it came out, and if anything was to happen to it, I should never forgive myself, as poor Lövborg couldn’t write it all over again, and so we must take the greatest care of it! And then I left it on a chair and went away—that was all! And you went and burnt the book all up! Bless me, who would have expected it?

Hedda.

Nobody, you dear simple old soul! But I did it for your sake—it was love, George!

George.

[In an outburst between doubt and joy.] Hedda, you don’t mean that! Your love takes such queer forms sometimes. Yes, but yes—[laughing in excess of joy] why, you must be fond of me! Just think of that now! Well, you are fun, Hedda! Look here, I must just run and tell the housemaid that—she will enjoy the joke so, eh?

Hedda.

[Coldly, in self-command.] It is surely not necessary even for a clever Norwegian man of letters in a realistic social drama, to make quite such a fool of himself as all that?

George.

No, that's true too. Perhaps we'd better keep it quiet—though I must tell Aunt Julie—it will make her so happy to hear that you burnt a manuscript on my account! And, besides, I should like to ask her whether that's a usual thing with young wives. [Looks uneasy and pensive again.] But poor old Ejlert's manuscript! Oh Lor', you know! Well, well!

"Mrs. Elvsted comes in"

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, please, I'm so uneasy about dear Mr. Lövborg. Something has happened to him, I'm sure!

[Judge Brack comes in from the hall, with a new hat in his hand.]

Brack.

You have guessed it, first time. Something has!
MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, dear, good gracious! What is it? Something distressing, I'm certain of it! [Shrieks aloud.]

Brack.

[Pleasantly.] That depends on how one takes it. He has shot himself, and is in a hospital now, that's all!

George.

[Sympathetically.] That's sad, eh? poor old Lövborg! Well, I am cut up to hear that. Fancy, though, eh?

Hedda.

Was it through the temple, or through the breast? The breast? Well, one can do it beautifully through the breast, too. Do you know, as an advanced woman, I like an act of that sort—it's so positive to have the courage to settle the account with himself—it's beautiful, really!

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, Hedda, what an odd way to look at it! But never mind poor dear Mr. Lövborg now. What we've got to do is to see if we can't put his wonderful manuscript, that he said he had torn to pieces, together again. [Takes a bundle of small pages out of the pocket of her mantle.] There are the loose scraps he dictated it to me from. I hid them on the chance of some such emergency. And if dear Mr. Tesman and I were to put our heads together, I do think something might come of it.

George.

Fancy! I will dedicate my life—or all I can spare of it—to the task. I seem to feel I owe him some slight amends, perhaps. No use crying over spilt milk, eh, Mrs. Elvsted? We’ll sit down—just you and I—in the back drawing-room, and see if you can’t inspire me as you did him, eh?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, goodness, yes! I should like it—if it only might be possible!

[George and Mrs. Elvsted go into the back drawing-room and become absorbed in} eager conversation; Hedda sits in a chair in the front room, and a little later Brack crosses over to her

Hedda.

[In a low tone.] Oh, Judge, what a relief to know that everything—including Lövborg's pistol—went off so well! In the breast! Isn't there a veil of unintentional beauty in that? Such an act of voluntary courage, too!

Brack.

[Smiles.] H'm!—perhaps, dear Mrs. Hedda—

Hedda.

[Enthusiastically.] But wasn't it sweet of him! To have the courage to live his own life after his own fashion—to break away from the banquet of life—so early and so drunk! A beautiful act like that does appeal to a superior woman's imagination!

Brack.

Sorry to shatter your poetical illusions, little Mrs. Hedda, but, as a matter of fact, our lamented friend met his end under other circumstances. The shot did not strike him in the breast—but— [Pauses.

Hedda.

[Excitedly.] General Gabler's pistols! I might have known it! Did they ever shoot straight? Where was he hit, then?

Brack.

[In a discreet undertone.] A little lower down!

Hedda.

Oh, how disgusting!—how vulgar!—how ridiculous!—like everything else about me!

Brack.

Yes, we're realistic types of human nature, and all that—but a trifle squalid, perhaps. And why did you give Lövborg your pistol, when it was certain to be traced by the police? For a charming cold-blooded woman with a clear head and no scruples, wasn't it just a leetle foolish!
Hedda.

Perhaps; but I wanted him to do it beautifully, and he didn't! Oh, I've just admitted that I did give him the pistol—how annoyingly unwise of me! Now I'm in your power, I suppose?

Brack.

Precisely—for some reason it's not easy to understand. But it's inevitable, and you know how you dread anything approaching scandal. All your past proceedings show that. [To George and Mrs. Elvsted who come in together from the back-room.] Well, how are you getting on with the reconstruction of poor Lövborg's great work, eh?

George.

Capitally; we've made out the first two parts already. And really, Hedda, I do believe Mrs. Elvsted is inspiring me; I begin to feel it coming on. Fancy that!
Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, goodness! Hedda, won't it be lovely if I can. I mean to try so hard!

Hedda.

Do, you dear little silly rabbit; and while you are trying I will go into the back drawing-room and lie down.

[She goes into the back room and draws the curtains. Short pause. Suddenly she is heard playing "The Bogie Man" within on the piano.]

George.

But, dearest Hedda, don't play "The Bogie Man" this evening. As one of my aunts is dead, and poor old Lövborg has shot himself, it seems just a little pointed, eh?

Hedda.

[Puts her head out between the curtains.] All right.
"What! the accounts of all those everlasting bores settled?"
I'll be quiet after this. I'm going to practise with the late General Gabler's pistol!

[Closes the curtains again; George gets behind the stove, Judge Brack under the table, and Mrs. Elvsted under the sofa. A shot is heard within.

George.

[Behind the stove.] Eh, look here, I tell you what—she’s hit me! Think of that!

[His legs are visibly agitated for a short time. Another shot is heard.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Under the sofa.] Oh, please, not me! Oh, goodness, now I can't inspire anybody any more. Oh!

[Her feet, which can be seen under the valance, quiver a little and then are suddenly still.

Brack.

[Vivaciously, from under the table.] I say, Mrs. Hedda, I'm coming in every evening—we will have great fun here togeth—— [Another shot is heard.]
Bless me! to bring down the poor old cock-of-the-walk—it's unsportsmanlike!—people don't do such things as that!

[The table-cloth is violently agitated for a minute, and presently the curtains open, and Hedda appears.

HEDDA.

[Clearly and firmly.] I've been trying in there to shoot myself beautifully—but with General Gabler's pistol—[She lifts the tablecloth, then looks behind the stove and under the sofa.] What! the accounts of all those everlasting bores settled? Then my suicide becomes unnecessary. Yes, I feel the courage of life once more!

[She goes into the back-room and plays "The Funeral March of a Marionette" as the Curtain falls.]
THE WILD DUCK

ACT FIRST

At Werle's house. In front a richly-upholstered study.

(r.) A green baize door leading to Werle's office.
At back, open folding doors, revealing an elegant dining-room, in which a brilliant Norwegian dinner-party is going on. Hired Waiters in profusion. A glass is tapped with a knife. Shouts of "Bravo!" Old Mr. Werle is heard making a long speech, proposing—according to the custom of Norwegian society on such occasions—the health of his Housekeeper, Mrs. Sörby. Presently several short-sighted, flabby, and thin-haired Chamberlains enter from the dining-room with Hialmar Ekdal, who writhes shyly under their remarks.

A Chamberlain.

As we are the sole surviving specimens of Norwegian nobility, suppose we sustain our reputation as aristocratic sparklers by enlarging upon the enormous amount we have eaten, and chaffing Hialmar Ekdal, the friend of our host's son, for being a professional photographer?

The other Chamberlains.

Bravo! We will.

[They do; delight of Hialmar. Old Werle comes in, leaning on his Housekeeper's arm, followed by his son, Gregers Werle.

Old Werle.

[Dejectedly.] Thirteen at table! [To Gregers, with a meaning glance at Hialmar.] This is the result of inviting an old college friend who has turned photographer! Wasting vintage wines on him, indeed. [He passes on gloomily.

HIALMAR.

[To Gregers.] I am almost sorry I came. Your old min is not friendly. Yet he set me up as a photographer fifteen years ago. Now he takes me down! But for him, I should never have married Gina, who, you may remember, was a servant in your family once.

GREGERS.

What? my old college friend married fifteen years ago—and to our Gina, of all people! If I had not been up at the works all these years, I suppose I should have heard something of such an event. But my father never mentioned it. Odd!

[He ponders; Old Ekdal comes out through the green baize-door, bowing, and begging pardon, carrying copying work. Old Werle says "Ugh" and "Pah" involuntarily. Hialmar shrinks back, and looks another way. A Chamberlain asks him pleasantly if he knows that old man.

Hialmar.

I—oh no. Not in the least. No relation!

Gregers.

[Shocked.] What, Hialmar, you, with your great soul, deny your own father!

Hialmar.

[Vehemently.] Of course—what else can a photographer do with a disreputable old parent, who has been in a penitentiary for making a fraudulent map? I shall leave this splendid banquet. The Chamberlains are not kind to me, and I feel the crushing hand of fate on my head!

[ Goes out hastily, feeling it. ]
"Father, a word with you in private: I loathe you."
Mrs. Sörby.

[Archly.] Any nobleman here say "Cold Punch"?

[Every nobleman says "Cold Punch" and follows her out in search of it with enthusiasm. Gregers approaches his father, who wishes he would go.]

Gregers.

Father, a word with you in private. I loathe you. I am nothing if not candid. Old Ekdal was your partner once, and it's my firm belief you deserved a prison quite as much as he did. However, you surely need not have married our Gina to my old friend Hialmar. You know very well she was no better than she should have been!

Old Werle.

True—but then no more is Mrs. Sörby. And I am going to marry her—if you have no objection, that is.
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

Gregers.

None in the world! How can I object to a stepmother who is playing Blind Man's Buff at the present moment with the Norwegian nobility? I am not so overstrained as all that. But really I cannot allow my old friend Hialmar, with his great, confiding, childlike mind, to remain in contented ignorance of Gina's past. No, I see my mission in life at last! I shall take my hat, and inform him that his home is built upon a lie. He will be so much obliged to me! [Takes his hat, and goes out.

Old Werle.

Ha!—I am a wealthy merchant, of dubious morals, and I am about to marry my housekeeper, who is on intimate terms with the Norwegian aristocracy. I have a son who loathes me, and who is either an Ibsenian satire on the Master's own ideals, or else an utterly impossible prig—I don't know or care which. Altogether, I flatter myself my household affords an accurate and realistic picture of Scandinavian Society!

Curtain.
ACT SECOND

Hialmar Ekdal's Photographic Studio. Cameras, neck-rests, and other instruments of torture lying about. Gina Ekdal and Hedwig, her daughter, aged 14, and wearing spectacles, discovered sitting up for Hialmar.

Hedvig.

Grandpapa is in his room with a bottle of brandy and a jug of hot water, doing some fresh copying work. Father is in society, dining out. He promised he would bring me home something nice!

Hialmar.

[Coming in, in evening dress.] And he has not forgotten his promise, my child. Behold! [He presents her with the menu card; Hedvig gulps down her tears; Hialmar notices her disappointment, with annoyance.] And this all the gratitude I get! After dining out and coming home in a dress-coat and boots, which are disgracefully tight! Well well, just to show you how hurt I am, I won't have any beer now! What a selfish brute I am! [Relenting.] You may bring me just a little drop. [He bursts into tears.] I will play you a plaintive Bohemian dance on my flute. [He does.] No beer at such a sacred moment as this! [He drinks.] Ha, this is real domestic bliss!

[Gregers Werle comes in, in a countrified suit.

Gregers.

I have left my father's home—dinner-party and all—for ever. I am coming to lodge with you.

Hialmar.

[Still melancholy.] Have some bread and butter. You won't?—then I will. I want it, after your father’s lavish hospitality. [Hedvig goes to fetch bread and butter.] My daughter—a poor short-sighted little thing—but mine own.

Gregers.

My father has had to take to strong glasses, too—he can hardly see after dinner. [To Old Ekdal, who stumbles in very drunk.] How can you, Lieutenant Ekdal, who were such a keen sportsman once, live in this poky little hole?

Old Ekdal.

I am a sportsman still. The only difference is that once I shot bears in a forest, and now I pot tame rabbits in a garret. Quite as amusing—and safer. [He goes to sleep on a sofa.]

Hjalmar.

[With pride.] It is quite true. You shall see. [He pushes back sliding doors, and reveals a garret full of rabbits and poultry—moonlight effect. Hedvig returns with bread and butter.]
HEDVIG.

[To Gregers.] If you stand just there, you get the best view of our Wild Duck. We are very proud of her, because she gives the play its title, you know, and has to be brought into the dialogue a good deal. Your father peppered her out shooting, and we saved her life.

HIALMAR.

Yes, Gregers, our estate is not large—but still we preserve, you see. And my poor old father and I sometimes get a day's gunning in the garret. He shoots with a pistol, which my illiterate wife here will call a "pigstol." He once, when he got into trouble, pointed it at himself. But the descendant of two lieutenant-colonels who had never quailed before living rabbit yet, faltered then. He didn't shoot. Then I put it to my own head. But at the decisive moment, I won the victory over myself. I remained in life. Now we only shoot rabbits and fowls with it. After all I am very happy and contented as I am. [He eats some bread and butter.]

Gregers.

But you ought not to be. You have a good deal of the Wild Duck about you. So have your wife and daughter. You are living in marsh vapours. Tomorrow I will take you out for a walk and explain what I mean. It is my mission in life. Good night! [He goes out.]

Gina and Hedwig.

What was the gentleman talking about, father?

Hjalmar.

[Eating bread and butter.] He has been dining, you know. No matter—what we have to do now, is to put my disreputable old whitehaired pariah of a parent to bed.

[He and Gina lift Old Eccles—we mean Old Ekdal—up by the legs and arms, and take him off to bed as the Curtain falls.]
ACT THREE

Hialmar's Studio. A photograph has just been taken. Gina and Hedvig are tidying up.

Gina.

[Apologetically.] There should have been a luncheon-party in this act, with Dr. Relling and Mølvik, who would have been in a state of comic "chippiness," after his excesses overnight. But, as it hadn't much to do with such plot as there is, we cut it out. It came cheaper. Here comes your father back from his walk with that lunatic, young Werle—you had better go and play with the Wild Duck.

[Hedvig goes.]
Hialmar.

[Coming in.] I have been for a walk with Gregers; he meant well—but it was tiring. Gina, he has told me that, fifteen years ago, before I married you, you were rather a Wild Duck, so to speak. [Severely.] Why haven't you been writhing in penitence and remorse all these years, eh?

Gina.

[Sensibly.] Why? Because I have had other things to do. You wouldn't take any photographs, so I had to.

Hialmar.

All the same—it was a swamp of deceit. And where am I to find elasticity of spirit to bring out my grand invention now? I used to shut myself up in the parlour, and ponder and cry, when I thought that the effort of inventing anything would sap my vitality. [Pathetically.] I did want to leave you an inventor's widow; but I never shall now, particularly as I haven't made up my mind what to invent yet. Yes, it's all over. Rabbits are trash, and even poultry palls. And I'll wring that cursed Wild Duck's neck!

Gregers.

[Coming in beaming.] Well, so you've got it over. Wasn't it soothing and ennobling, eh? and ain't you both obliged to me?

Gina.

No; it's my opinion you'd better have minded your own business. [Weeps.

Gregers.

[In great surprise.] Bless me! Pardon my Norwegian naïveté, but this ought really to be quite a new starting-point. Why, I confidently expected to have found you both beaming!—Mrs. Ekdal, being so illiterate, may take some little time to see it—but you, Hjalmar, with your deep mind, surely you feel a new consecration, eh?
HIALMAR.

[Dubiously.] Oh—er—yes. I suppose so—in a sort of way. [HEDVIG runs in, overjoyed.

HEDVIG.

Father, only see what Mrs. Sörby has given me for a birthday present—a beautiful deed of gift!

[SHOWS IT.

HIALMAR.

[Eluding her.] Ha! Mrs. Sörby, the family housekeeper. My father's sight failing! Hedvig in goggles! What vistas of heredity these astonishing coincidences open up! I am not short-sighted, at all events, and I see it all—all! This is my answer. [HE takes the deed, and tears it across.] Now I have nothing more to do in this house. [PUTS ON overcoat.] My home has fallen in ruins about me. [BURSTS into tears.] My hat!

GREGERS.

Oh, but you mustn't go. You must be all three together, to attain the true frame of mind for self-sacrificing forgiveness, you know!

Hialmar.

Self-sacrificing forgiveness be blowed!

He tears himself away, and goes out.

Hedvig.

With despairing eyes. Oh, he said it might be blowed! Now he'll never come home any more!

Gregers.

Shall I tell you how to regain your father's confidence, and bring him home surely? Sacrifice the Wild Duck.

Hedvig.

Do you think that will do any good?

Gregers.

You just try it!

Curtain.
ACT FOURTH

Same Scene. Gregers enters, and finds Gina retouching photographs.

Gregers.

[Pleasantly.] Hjalmar not come in yet, after last night, I suppose?

Gina.

Not he! He's been out on the loose all night with Relling and Mölvik. Now he's snoring on their sofa.

Gregers.

[Disappointed.] Dear!—dear!—when he ought to be yearning to wrestle in solitude and self-examination!
Gina.

[Rudely.] Self-examine your grandmother!

[She goes out; Hedvig comes in.

Gregers.

[To Hedvig.] Ah, I see you haven't found courage to settle the Wild Duck yet!

Hedvig.

No—it seemed such a delightful idea at first. Now it strikes me as a trifle—well, Ibsenish.

Gregers.

[Reprovingly.] I thought you hadn't grown up quite unharmed in this house! But if you really had the true, joyous spirit of self-sacrifice, you'd have a shot at that Wild Duck, if you died for it!

Hedvig.

[Slowly.] I see; you mean that my constitution's changing, and I ought to behave as such?
THE WILD DUCK

GREGERS.

Exactly, I'm what Americans would term a "crank"—but I believe in you, Hedvig.

[Hedvig takes down the pistol from the mantelpiece, and goes into the garret with flashing eyes; Gina comes in.

HIALMAR.

[Looking in at door with hesitation; he is unwashed and dishevelled.] Has anybody happened to see my hat?

GINA.

Gracious, what a sight you are! Sit done and have some breakfast, do. [She brings it.

HIALMAR.

[Indignantly.] What! touch food under this roof? Never! [Helps himself to bread-and-butter and coffee.] Go and pack up my scientific uncut books, my manuscripts, and all the best rabbits, in my portmanteau. I am going away for ever. On second thoughts, I shall stay in the spare room for another day or two—it won't be the same as living with you!

[He takes some salt meat.

Gregers.

Must you go? Just when you've got nice firm ground to build upon—thanks to me! Then there's your great invention, too.

Hjalmar.

Everything's invented already. And I only cared about my invention because, although it doesn't exist yet, I thought Hedvig believed in it, with all the strength of her sweet little shortsighted eyes! But now I don't believe in Hedvig!

[He pours himself out another cup of coffee.

Gregers.

Earnestly. But, Hjalmar, if I can prove to you that she is ready to sacrifice her cherished Wild Duck? See!

[He pushes back sliding-door, and discovers Hedvig aiming at the Wild Duck with the butt-end of the pistol. Tableau.]

Gina.

[Excitedly.] But don’t you see? It’s the pigstol—that fatal Norwegian weapon which, in Ibsenian dramas, never shoots straight! And she has got it by the wrong end too. She will shoot herself!

Gregers.

[Quietly.] She will! Let the child make amends. It will be a most realistic and impressive finale!

Gina.

No, no—put down the pigstol, Hedvig. Do you hear, child?

Hedvig.

[Still aiming.] I hear—but I shan’t unless father tells me to.

Gregers.

Hjalmar, show the great soul I always said you had. This sorrow will set free what is noble in you. Don’t spoil a fine situation. Be a man! Let the child shoot herself!
Hialmar.

[Irresolutely.] Well, really, I don't know. There's a good deal in what Gregers says. H'm!

Gina.

A good deal of tomfool rubbish! I'm illiterate, I know. I've been a Wild Duck in my time, and I waddle. But for all that, I'm the only person in the play with a grain of common-sense. And I'm sure—whatever Mr. Ibsen or Gregers choose to say—that a screaming burlesque like this ought not to end like a tragedy—even in this queer Norway of ours! And it shan't, either! Tell the child to put that nasty pigstol down, and come away—do!

Hialmar.

[Yielding.] Ah, well, I am a farcical character myself, after all. Don't touch a hair of that duck's head, Hedvig. Come to my arms and all shall be forgiven!

[Hedvig throws down the pistol—which goes off and kills a rabbit—and rushes into her father's arms. Old Ekdal comes out of a corner with a fowl on each shoulder, and bursts into tears. Affecting family picture.
"Put that nasty pigstol down!"

Gregers.

[Annoyed.] It's all very pretty, I dare say—but it's not Ibsen! My real mission is to be the thirteenth at table. I don't know what I mean—but I fly to fulfil it! [He goes.

Hialmar.

And now we've got rid of him, Hedvig, fetch me the deed of gift I tore up, and a slip of paper, and a penny bottle of gum, and we'll soon make a valid instrument of it again.

[He pastes the torn deed together as the Curtain slowly descends.]
PILL-DOCTOR HERDAL

[Prefatory Note.—The original title—Mester-Pjil-drøgster Herdal—would sound a trifle too uncouth to the Philistine ear, and is therefore modified as above, although the term "drøgster," strictly speaking, denotes a practitioner who has not received a regular diploma].

ACT FIRST

An elegantly furnished drawing-room at Dr. Herdal's.

In front, on the left, a console-table, on which is a large round bottle full of coloured water. On the right a stove, with a banner-screen made out of a richly-embroidered chest-protector. On the stove, a stethoscope and a small galvanic battery. In one corner, a hat and umbrella stand; in another, a desk, at which stands Senna Blakdraf, making out the quarterly accounts. Through a glass-door at the back is seen the Dispensary, where Rubub Kalomel is seated, occupied in rolling a pill. Both go on working in perfect silence for four minutes and a half.

Dr. Haustus Herdal.

[Enters through hall-door; he is elderly, with a plain sensible countenance, but slightly weak hair and expression.] Come here Miss Blakdraf. [Hangs up hat, and throws his mackintosh on a divan.] Have you made out all those bills yet?

[Looks sternly at her.

Senna.

[In a low hesitating voice.] Almost. I have charged each patient with three attendances daily. Even when you only dropped in for a cup of tea and a chat. [Passionately.] I felt I must—I must!
Dr. Herdal.

[Alters his tone, clasps her head in his hands, and whispers.] I wish you could make out the bills for me, always.

Senna.

[In nervous exaltation.] How lovely that would be! Oh, you are so unspeakably good to me! It is too enthralling to be here!

[Sinks down and embraces his knees.]

Dr. Herdal.

So I've understood. [With suppressed irritation.] For goodness' sake, let go my legs! I do wish you wouldn't be so confoundedly neurotic!

Rübub.

[Has risen, and comes in through glass-door, breathing with difficulty; he is a prematurely bald young man of fifty-five, with a harelip, and squints slightly.] I beg pardon, Dr. Herdal, I see I interrupt you. [As Sena rises.] I have just completed this pill. Have you looked at it?

[He offers it for inspection, diffidently.]

Dr. Herdal.

[Evasively.] It appears to be a pill of the usual dimensions.

Rubub.

[Cast down.] All these years you have never given me one encouraging word! Can't you praise my pill?

Dr. Herdal.

[Struggles with himself.] I—I cannot. You should not attempt to compound pills on your own account.

Rubub.

[Breathing laboriously.] And yet there was a time when you, too——

Dr. Herdal.

[Complacently.] Yes, it was certainly a pill that came as a lucky stepping-stone—but not a pill like that!
"For goodness' sake, let go my legs!"

Rübub.

[Veheemntly.] Listen! Is that your last word? Is my aged mother to pass out of this world without ever knowing whether I am competent to construct an effective pill or not?

Dr. Herdal.

[As if in desperation.] You had better try it upon your mother—it will enable her to form an opinion. Only mind—I will not be responsible for the result.

Rübub.

I understand. Exactly as you tried your pill, all those years ago, upon Dr. Ryval.

[He bows and goes out.]

Dr. Herdal.

[Uneasily.] He said that so strangely, Senna. But tell me now—when are you going to marry him?
[Starts—half glancing up at him.] I—I don’t know. This year—next year—now—never! I cannot marry him . . . I cannot—I cannot—it is so utterly impossible to leave you!

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, I can understand that. But, my poor Senna, hadn’t you better take a little walk?

Senna.

[Clasps her hands gratefully.] How sweet and thoughtful you are to me! I will take a walk.

Dr. Herdal.

[With a suppressed smile.] Do! And—h’m!—you needn’t trouble to come back. I have advertised for a male book-keeper—they are less emotional. Good-night, my little Senna!
Senna.

[Softly and quiveringly.] Good-night, Dr. Herdal!

[Staggers out of hall-door, blowing kisses.

Mrs. Herdal.

[Enters through the window, plaintively.] Quite an acquisition for you, Haustus, this Miss Blakdraf!

Dr. Herdal.

She's—h'm—extremely civil and obliging. But I am parting with her, Aline—mainly on your account.

Mrs. Herdal.

[Evades him.] Was it on my account, indeed, Haustus? You have parted with so many young persons on my account—so you tell me!

Dr. Herdal.

[Depressed.] Oh, but this is hopeless! When I have tried so hard to bring a ray of sunlight into your desolate life! I must give Rübüb Kalomel notice too—his pill is really too preposterous!
Mrs. Herdal.

[Feels gropingly for a chair, and sits down on the floor.] Him, too! Ah, Haustus, you will never make my home a real home for me. My poor first husband, Halvard Solness, tried—and he couldn't! When one has had such misfortunes as I have—all the family portraits burnt, and the silk dresses, too, and a pair of twins, and nine lovely dolls.

[Chokes with tears.

Dr. Herdal.

[As if to lead her away from the subject.] Yes, yes, yes, that must have been a heavy blow for you, my poor Aline. I can understand that your spirits can never be really high again. And then for poor Master Builder Solness to be so taken up with that Miss Wangel as he was—that, too, was so wretched for you. To see him topple off the tower, as he did that day ten years ago——
Mrs. Herdal.

Yes, that too, Haustus. But I did not mind it so much—it all seemed so perfectly natural in both of them.

Dr. Herdal.

Natural! For a girl of twenty-three to taunt a middle-aged architect, whom she knew to be constitutionally liable to giddiness, never to let him have any peace till he had climbed a spire as dizzy as himself—and all for the fun of seeing him fall off—how in the world—!

Mrs. Herdal.

[Laying the table for supper with dried fish and punch.] The younger generation have a keener sense of humour than we elder ones, Haustus, and perhaps after all, she was only a perplexing sort of allegory.

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, that would explain her to some extent, no doubt. But how he could be such an old fool!
That Miss Wangel was a strangely fascinating type of girl. Why, even I myself——

Dr. Herdal.

[Sits down and takes some fish.] Fascinating? Well, goodness knows, I couldn't see that at all. [Seriously.] Has it never struck you, Aline, that elderly Norwegians are so deucedly impressionable—mere bundles of overstrained nerves, hypersensitive ganglia. Except, of course, the Medical Profession.

Mrs. Herdal.

Yes, of course; those in that profession are not so inclined to gangle. And when one has succeeded by such a stroke of luck as you have——

Dr. Herdal.

[Drinks a glass of punch.] You're right enough there. If I had not been called in to prescribe for Dr. Ryval, who used to have the leading practice here, I should never have stepped so wonderfully into his shoes as I did.  [Changes to a tone of quiet chuckling merriment.] Let me tell you a funny story, Aline; it sounds a ludicrous thing—but all my good fortune here was based upon a simple little pill.  For if Dr. Ryval had never taken it——

MRS. HERDAL.

[Anxiously.] Then you do think it was the pill that caused him to——?

DR. HERDAL.

On the contrary; I am perfectly sure the pill had nothing whatever to do with it—the inquest made it quite clear that it was really the liniment.  But don't you see, Aline, what tortures me night and day is the thought that it might unconsciously have been the pill which—— Never to be free from that!  To have such a thought gnawing and burning always—always, like a moral mustard plaster!

[He takes more punch.]
Yes; I suppose there is a poultice of that sort burning on every breast—and we must never take it off either—it is our simple duty to keep it on. I too, Haustus, am haunted by a fancy that if this Miss Wangel were to ring at our bell now—

Dr. Herdal.

After she has been lost sight of for ten years? She is safe enough in some sanatorium, depend upon it. And what if she did come? Do you think, my dear good woman, that I—a sensible clear-headed general practitioner, who have found out all I know for myself—would let her play the deuce with me as she did with poor Halvard? No, general practitioners don't do such things—even in Norway!

Mrs. Herdal.

Don't they indeed, Haustus? [The surgery-bell rings loudly.] Did you hear that? There she is! I will go and put on my best cap. It is my duty to show her that small attention.
Dr. Herdal.

[Laughing nervously.] Why, what on earth!—It's the night-bell. It is most probably the new book-keeper! [Mrs. Herdal goes out; Dr. Herdal rises with difficulty, and opens the door.] Goodness gracious!—it is that girl, after all!

[Hilda Wangel enters through the dispensary door. She wears a divided skirt, thick boots, and a Tam o' Shanter with an eagle's wing in it. Somewhat freckled. Carries a green tin cylinder slung round her, and a rug in a strap. Goes straight up to Herdal, her eyes sparkling with happiness.] How are you? I've run you down, you see! The ten years are up. Isn't it scrumptiously thrilling, to see me like this?

Dr. Herdal.

[Politely retreating.] It is—very much so—but still I don't in the least understand——
HILDA.

[Measures him with a glance.] Oh, you will. I have come to be of use to you. I've no luggage, and no money. Not that that makes any difference. I never have. And I've been allured and attracted here. You surely know how these things come about? [Throws her arms round him.]

DR. HERDAL.

What the deuce! Miss Wangel, you mustn't. I'm a married man! There's my wife!

MRS. HERDAL enters.

HILDA.

As if that mattered—it's only dear, sweet Mrs. Solness. She doesn't mind—do you, dear Mrs. Solness?

MRS. HERDAL.

It does not seem to be of much use minding, Miss Wangel. I presume you have come to stay?
HILDA.

[In amused surprise.] Why, of course—what else should I come for? I always come to stay, until—h'm! [Nods slowly, and sits down at table.]

Dr. Herdal.

[Involuntarily.] She's drinking my punch! If she thinks I'm going to stand this sort of thing, she's mistaken. I'll soon show her a pill-doctor is a very different kind of person from a mere Master Builder!

[Hilda finishes the punch with an indefinable expression in her eyes, and Dr. Herdal looks on gloomily as the Curtain falls.]
ACT SECOND

Dr. Herdal's drawing-room and dispensary, as before.

It is early in the day. Dr. Herdal sits by the little table, taking his own temperature with a clinical thermometer. By the door stands the New Book-keeper; he wears blue spectacles and a discoloured white tie, and seems slightly nervous.

Dr. Herdal.

Well, now you understand what is necessary. My late book-keeper, Miss Blakdraf, used to keep my accounts very cleverly—she charged every visit twice over.
The New Book-keeper.

I am familiar with book-keeping by double entry. I was once employed at a bank.

Dr. Herdal.

I am discharging my assistant, too; he was always trying to push me out with his pills. Perhaps you will be able to dispense?

The New Book-keeper.

[Modestly.] With an additional salary, I should be able to do that too.

Dr. Herdal.

Capital! You shall dispense with an additional salary. Go into the dispensary, and see what you can make of it. You may mistake a few drugs at first—but everything must have a beginning.

[As the New Book-keeper retires, Mrs. Herdal enters in a hat and cloak with a watering-pot, noiselessly.]
Mrs. Herdal.

Miss Wangel got up early, before breakfast, and went for a walk. She is so wonderfully vivacious!

Dr. Herdal.

So I should say. But tell me, Aline, is she really going to stay with us here? [Nervously.

Mrs. Herdal.

[Looks at him.] So she tells me. And, as she has brought nothing with her except a tooth-brush and a powder-puff, I am going into the town to get her a few articles. We must make her feel at home.

Dr. Herdal.

[Breaking out.] I will make her not only feel but be at home, wherever that is, this very day! I will not have a perambulating Allegory without a portmanteau here on an indefinite visit. I say, she shall go—do you hear, Aline? Miss Wangel will go!

[Raps with his fist on table.]
Mrs. Herdal.

[Quietly.] If you say so, Haustus, no doubt she will have to go. But you must tell her so yourself.

[Puts the watering-pot on the console table, and goes out, as Hilda enters, sparkling with pleasure.

Hilda.

[ Goes up straight to him.] Good morning, Dr. Herdal. I have just seen a pig killed. It was ripping—I mean, gloriously thrilling! And your wife has taken a tremendous fancy to me. Fancy that!

Dr. Herdal.

[ Gloomily.] It is eccentric certainly. But my poor dear wife was always a little——

Hilda.

[ Nods her head slowly several times.] So you have noticed that too? I have had a long talk with her. She can't get over your discharging Mr. Kalomel—he is the only man who ever really understood her.
DR. HERDAL.

If I could only pay her off a little bit of the huge, immeasurable debt I owe her—but I can't!

HILDA.

[Looks hard at him.] Can't I help you? I helped Ragnar Brovik. Didn't you know I stayed with him and poor little Kaia—after that accident to my Master Builder? I did. I made Ragnar build me the loveliest castle in the air—lovelier, even, than poor Mr. Solness's would have been—and we stood together on the very top. The steps were rather too much for Kaia. Besides, there was no room for her on top. And he put towering spires on all his semi-detached villas. Only, somehow, they didn't let. Then the castle in the air tumbled down, and Ragnar went into liquidation, and I continued my walking-tour.

DR. HERDAL.

[Interested against his will.] And where did you go after that, may I ask, Miss Wangel?
HILDA.

Oh, ever so far north. There I met Mr. and Mrs. Tesman—the second Mrs. Tesman—she who was Mrs. Elvsted, with the irritating hair, you know. They were on their honeymoon, and had just decided that it was impossible to reconstruct poor Mr. Lövborg's great book out of Mrs. Elvsted’s rough notes. But I insisted on George’s attempting the impossible—with Me. And what do you think Mrs. Tesman wears in her hair now?

DR. HERDAL.

Why, really I could not say. Vine-leaves, perhaps.

HILDA.

Wrong—straws! Poor Tesman didn’t fancy that—so he shot himself, un-beautifully, through his ticket-pocket. And I went on and took Rosmershölm for the summer. There had been misfortune in the house, so it was to let. Dear good old Rector Kroll acted as my reference; his wife and children had no sympathy with his views, so I used to see him every day. And I persuaded him, too, to attempt the impossible—he had never ridden anything but a rocking-horse in his life, but I made him promise to mount the White Horse of Rosmersholm. He didn’t get over that. They found his body, a fortnight afterwards, in the mill-dam. Thrilling!

Dr. Herdal.

[Shakes his finger at her.] What a girl you are, Miss Wangel! But you mustn’t play these games here, you know.

HILDA.

[Laughs to herself.] Of course not. But I suppose I am a strange sort of bird.

Dr. Herdal.

You are like a strong tonic. When I look at you I seem to be regarding an effervescent saline draught. Still, I really must decline to take you.
HILDA.

[.A little sulky.] That is not how you spoke ten years ago, up at the mountain station, when you were such a flirt!

DR. HERDAL.

Was I a flirt? Dence take me if I remember. But I am not like that now.

HILDA.

Then you have really forgotten how you sat next to me at the table d’hôte, and made pills and swallowed them, and were so splendid and buoyant and free that all the old women who knitted left next day?

DR. HERDAL.

What a memory you have for trifles, Miss Wangel; it’s quite wonderful!
HILDA.

Trifles! There was no trifling on your part. When you promised to come back in ten years, like a troll, and fetch me!

DR. HERDAL.

Did I say all that? It must have been _after table d'hôte_!

HILDA.

It was. I was a mere chit then—only twenty-three; but I remember. And now I have come for you.

DR. HERDAL.

Dear, dear! But there is nothing of the troll about me now I have married Mrs. Solness.

HILDA.

_[Looking sharply at him._] Yes, I remember you were always dropping in to tea in those days.
Dr. Herdal.

[Seems hurt.] Every visit was duly put down in the ledger and charged for—as poor little Senna will tell you.

Hilda.

Little Senna? Oh, Dr. Herdal, I believe there is a bit of the troll left in you still!

Dr. Herdal.

[Laughs a little.] No, no; my conscience is perfectly robust—always was.

Hilda.

Are you quite quite sure that, when you went indoors with dear Mrs. Solness that afternoon, and left me alone with my Master Builder, you did not foresee—perhaps wish—intend, even a little, that—H'm?

Dr. Herdal.

That you would talk the poor man into clambering up that tower? You want to drag Me into that business now!
HILDA.

[Teasingly.] Yes, I certainly think that then you went on exactly like a troll.

DR. HERDAL.

[With uncontrollable emotion.] Hilda, there is not a corner of me safe from you! Yes, I see now that must have been the way of it. Then I was a troll in that, too! But isn't it terrible the price I have had to pay for it? To have a wife who—— No, I shall never roll a pill again—never, never!

HILDA.

[Lays her head on the stove, and answers as if half asleep.] No more pills? Poor Doctor Herdal!

DR. HERDAL.

[Bitterly.] No—nothing but cosy commonplace grey powders for a whole troop of children.

HILDA.

[Lively again.] Not grey powders! [Quite seriously.] I will tell you what you shall make next. Beautiful "Beautiful rainbow-coloured powders that will give one a real grip on the world!"
rainbow-coloured powders that will give one a real grip on the world. Powders to make every one free and buoyant, and ready to grasp at one's own happiness, to dare what one would. I will have you make them. I will—I will!

Dr. Herdal.

H'm! I am not quite sure that I clearly understand. And then the ingredients——?

Hilda.

What stupid people all of you pill-doctors are, to be sure! Why, they will be poisons, of course!

Dr. Herdal.

Poisons? Why in the world should they be that?

Hilda.

[Without answering him.] All the thrillingest, deadliest poisons—it is only such things that are wholesome, nowadays.
Dr. Herdal.

[As if caught by her enthusiasm.] And I could colour them, too, by exposing them to rays cast through a prism. Oh, Hilda, how I have needed you all these years! For, you see, with her it was impossible to discuss such things. [Embraces her.

Mrs. Herdal.

[Enters noiselessly through hall-door.] I suppose, Haustus, you are persuading Miss Wangel to start by the afternoon steamer? I have bought her a pair of curling-tongs, and a packet of hair-pins. The larger parcels are coming on presently.

Dr. Herdal.

[Uneasily.] H'm! Hilda—Miss Wangel I should say—is kindly going to stay on a little longer, to assist me in some scientific experiments. You wouldn't understand them if I told you.
Mrs. Herdal.

Shouldn't I, Haustus? I daresay not.

[The New Book-keeper looks through the glass door of dispensary.]

Hilda.

[Starts violently and points—then in a whisper.] Who is that?

Dr. Herdal.

Only the new Book-keeper and Assistant—a very intelligent person.

Hilda.

[Looks straight in front of her with a far-away expression, and whispers to herself.] I thought at first it was . . . . But no—that would be too frightfully thrilling!

Dr. Herdal.

[To himself.] I'm turning into a regular old troll now—but I can't help myself. After all, I am only an elderly Norwegian. We are made like that . . . . Rainbow powders—real rainbow powders! With Hilda! . . . . Oh, to have the joy of life once more!

[Takes his temperature again as Curtain falls.]
ACT THIRD

[On the right, a smart verandah, attached to Dr. Herdal's dwelling-house, and communicating with the drawing-room and dispensary by glass doors. On the left a tumble-down rockery, with a headless plaster Mercury. In front, a lawn, with a large silvered glass globe on a stand. Chairs and tables. All the furniture is of galvanized iron. A sunset is seen going on among the trees.

Dr. Herdal.

[Comes out of dispensary-door cautiously, and whispers.] Hilda, are you in there?

[Taps with fingers on drawing-room door.]
HILDA.

[Comes out with a half-teasing smile.] Well—and how is the rainbow-powder getting on, Dr. Herdal?

DR. HERDAL.

[With enthusiasm.] It is getting on simply splendidly. I sent the new assistant out to take a little walk, so that he should not be in the way. There is arsenic in the powder, Hilda, and digitalis too, and strychnine, and the best beetle-killer!

HILDA.

[With happy, wondering eyes.] Lots of beetle-killer. And you will give some of it to her, to make her free and buoyant. I think one really has the right—when people happen to stand in the way——!

DR. HERDAL.

Yes, you may well say so, Hilda. Still—[dubiously]—it does occur to me that such doings may perhaps be misunderstood—by the narrow-minded and conventional. [They go on the lawn, and sit down.]
HILDA.

[With an outburst.] Oh, that all seems to me so foolish—so irrelevant! As if the whole thing wasn’t intended as an allegory!

DR. HERDAL.

[Relieved.] Ah, so long as it is merely allegorical, of course—— But what is it an allegory of, Hilda?

HILDA.

[Reflects in vain.] How can you sit there and ask such questions? I suppose I am a symbol—of some sort.

DR. HERDAL.

[As a thought flashes upon him.] A cymbal? That would certainly account for your bra—— Then, am I a cymbal too, Hilda?

HILDA.

Why yes—what else? You represent the artist-worker, or the elder generation, or the pursuit of the ideal, or a bilious conscience—or something or other. You're all right!

Dr. Herdal.

Shakes his head. Am I? But I don't quite see— Well, well, cymbals are meant to clash a little. And I see plainly now that I ought to prescribe this powder for as many as possible. Isn't it terrible, Hilda, that so many poor souls never really die their own deaths—pass out of the world without even the formality of an inquest? As the district Coroner. I feel strongly on the subject.

Hilda.

And, when the Coroner has finished sitting on all the bodies, perhaps—but I shan't tell you now. Speaks as if to a child. There, run away and finish making the rainbow-powder, do!

Dr. Herdal.

Skips up into the dispensary. I will—I will! Oh, I do feel such a troll—such a light-haired, light-headed old devil!
[Enters garden-gate.] I have had my dismissal—but I'm not going without saying good-bye to Mrs. Herdal.

Hilda.

Dr. Herdal would disapprove—you really must not, Mr. Kalomel. And, besides, Mrs. Herdal is not at home. She is in the town buying me a reel of cotton. Dr. Herdal is in. He is making real rainbow powders for regenerating everybody all round. Won't that be fun?

Rubub.

Making powders? Ha! ha! But you will see he won't take one himself. It is quite notorious to us younger men that he simply daren't do it.

Hilda.

[With a little snort of contempt.] Oh, I daresay—that's so likely! [Defiantly.] I know he can, though. I've seen him!
There is a tradition that he once—but not now—he knows better. I think you said Mrs. Herdal was in the town? I will go and look for her. I understand her so well. [Goes out by gate.]

[HILDA.]

[Calls.] Dr. Herdal! Come out this minute. I want you—awfully!

[DR. HERDAL.]

[Puts his head out.] Just when I am making such wonderful progress with the powder. [Comes down and leans on a table.] Have you hit upon some way of giving it to Aline? I thought if you were to put it in her arrowroot—?

[HILDA.]

No, thanks. I won't have that now. I have just recollected that it is a rule of mine never to injure anybody I have once been formally introduced to.
Strangers don’t count. No, poor Mrs. Herdal mustn’t take that powder!

Dr. Herdal.

[Disappointed.] Then is nothing to come of making rainbow powders, after all, Hilda?

Hilda.

[Looks hard at him.] People say you are afraid to take your own physic. Is that true?

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, I am. [After a pause— with candour.] I find it invariably disagrees with me.

Hilda.

[With a half-dubious smile.] I think I can understand that. But you did once. You swallowed your own pills that day at the table d’hôte, ten years ago. And I heard a harp in the air, too!

Dr. Herdal.

[Open-mouthed.] I don’t think that could have been me. I don’t play any instrument. And that was quite a special thing, too. It's not every day I can do it. Those were only bread pills, Hilda.

HILDA.

[With flashing eyes.] But you rolled them, you took them. And I want to see you stand once more free and high and great, swallowing your own preparations. [Passionately.] I will have you do it! [Imploringly.] Just once more, Dr. Herdal!

DR. HERDAL.

If I did, Hilda, my medical knowledge, slight as it is, leads me to the conclusion that I should in all probability burst.

HILDA.

[Looks deeply into his eyes.] So long as you burst beautifully! But no doubt that Miss Blakdraf——

DR. HERDAL.

You must believe in me utterly and entirely. I will do anything—anything, Hilda, to provide you with agreeable entertainment. I will swallow my own powder! [To himself, as he goes gravely up to dispensary.] If only the drugs are sufficiently adulterated!

[Goes in; as he does so, the New Assistant enters the garden in blue spectacles, unseen by Hilda, and follows him, leaving open the glass door.

Senna.

[Comes wildly out of drawing-room.] Where is dear Dr. Herdal? Oh, Miss Wangel, he has discharged me—but I can't—I simply can't live away from that lovely ledger.

Hilda.

[Jubilantly.] At this moment Dr. Herbal is in the dispensary, taking one of his own powders.

Senna.

[Despairingly.] But—but it is utterly impossible! Miss Wangel, you have such a firm hold of him—don't let him do that!
HILDA.

I have already done all I can.

[Rübub appears, talking confidentially with Mrs. Herdal, at gate.

SENNÁ.

Oh, Mrs. Herdal, Rübub! The Pill-Doctor is going to take one of his own preparations. Save him—quick!

Rübub.

[With cold politeness.] I am sorry to hear it—for his sake. But it would be quite contrary to professional etiquette to prevent him.

MRS. HERDAL.

And I never interfere with my husband's proceedings. I know my duty, Miss Blakdraf, if others don't!

HILDA.

[Exulting with great intensity.] At last! Now I see him in there, great and free again, mixing the powder in a spoon—with jam! . . . Now he raises the spoon. Higher—higher still! [A gulp is audible from within.] There, didn’t you hear a harp in the air? [Quietly.] I can’t see the spoon any more. But there is one he is striving with, in blue spectacles!

The New Assistant’s Voice.

[Within.] The Pill-Doctor Herdal has taken his own powder!

Hilda.

[As if petrified.] That voice! Where have I heard it before? No matter—he has got the powder down! [Waves a shawl in the air, and shrieks with wild jubilation.] It’s too awfully thrilling! My—my Pill-Doctor!

The New Assistant.

[Comes out on verandah.] I am happy to inform you that—as, to avoid accidents, I took the simple precaution of filling all the dispensary-jars with camphorated chalk—no serious results may be antiicipated from Dr. Herdal's rashness. [Removes spectacles.] Nora, don't you know me?

HILDA.

[Reflects.] I really don't remember having the pleasure—- And I'm sure I heard a harp in the air!

MRS. HERDAL.

I fancy, Miss Wangel, it must have been merely a bee in your bonnet

THE NEW ASSISTANT.

[Tenderly.] Still the same little singing-bird! Oh, Nora, my long-lost lark!

HILDA.

[Sulkily.] I'm not a lark—I'm a bird of prey—and when I get my claws into anything——!

THE NEW ASSISTANT.

Macaroons, for instance? I remember your tastes of old. See, Nora! [Produces a paper-bag from his coat-tail pocket.] They were fresh this morning!
"My, my Pill-doctor!"
HILDA.

[Waverings.] If you insist on calling me Nora, I think you must be just a little mad yourself.

THE NEW ASSISTANT.

We are all a little mad—in Norway. But Torvald Helmer is sane enough still to recognise his own little squirrel again! Surely, Nora, your education is complete at last—you have gained the experience you needed?

HILDA.

[Nods slowly.] Yes, Torvald, you're right enough there. I have thought things out for myself, and have got clear about them. And I have quite made up my mind that Society and the Law are all wrong, and that I am right.

HELMER.

[Overjoyed.] Then you have learnt the Great Lesson, and are fit to undertake the charge of your children's education at last! You've no notion how they've grown! Yes, Nora, our marriage will be a true marriage now. You will come back to the Dolls' House, won't you?

HILDA-NORA-HELMER-WANGEL.

[hesitates.] Will you let me forge cheques if I do, Torvald?

HELMER.

[ardently.] All day. And at night, Nora, we will falsify the accounts—together!

HILDA-NORA-HELMER-WANGEL.

[throws herself into his arms, and helps herself to macaroons.] That will be fearfully thrilling! My—my Manager!

DR. HERDAL.

[comes out very pale, from dispensary.] Hilda I did take the—I'm afraid I interrupt you?

HELMER.

Not in the least. But this lady is my little lark, and she is going back to her cage by the next steamer.

Dr. Herdal.

[Bitterly.] Am I never to have a gleam of happiness? But stay—do I see my little Senna once more?

Rübub.

Pardon me—my little Senna. She always believed so firmly in my pill!

Dr. Herdal.

Well—well. If it must be. Rübub, I will take you into partnership, and we will take out a patent for that pill, jointly. Aline, my poor dear Aline, let us try once more if we cannot bring a ray of brightness into our cheerless home!

Mrs. Herdal.

Oh, Haustus, if only we could—but why do you propose that to me—now?
Dr. Herdal.

[Softly—to himself.] Because I have tried being a troll—and found that nothing came of it, and it wasn’t worth sixpence!

LITTLE MOPSÉMAN
PERSONS

ALFRED FRÜYSECK (Man of Letters).

Mrs. Spreta Früyseck (his wife).

Little Mopsëman (their Pudeldachs, six years and nine months old).

Mopsa Brovik (a little less than kin to Alfred).

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

The Varmint-Blok.
LITTLE MOPSEMAN

[Translator’s Note.—The word “blok,” like the analogous Norwegian “géyser,” implies merely an individual—not necessarily a shady one. Cf. ELEN and CHEVALIER, passim.]

THE FIRST ACT

A richly upholstered garden-room, full of art-pots and other furniture. Mrs. Spreta Frøyseck stands beside the table, unpacking the traditional bag. Shortly after, Miss Mopsa Brovik enters by the door; she carries a pink parasol and a rather portly portfolio with a patent lock.

Mopsa.

[As she enters.] Good morning, my dear Spreta! [Sees the bag.] Why, you are unpacking a travelling-bag on the drawing-room table! Then Alfred has actually come home? [Takes off her things.

Spreta.

[Turns and nods with a teasing smile.] As if you didn’t know! When you have never been down in these parts all the time he has been away! [Unpacking a flannel vest and a respi-rator.] Yes, he turned up last night, quite unexpectedly.

Mopsa.

Then it was that that drew me out here! I felt I must. My poor dear mother, Kaia—she that was a Miss Fosli, you know—was like that. She always felt she must. It’s heredity. Surely you can understand that?

Spreta.

[Takes out a bottle of cough mixture, and closes the bag with a snap. I am not quite a fool, my dear.
But really, when you have such a firm admirer in Mr. Blochdrähn——!

Mopsa.

He is such a mere bachelor. I never could feel really attracted to any unmarried man. All that seems to me so utterly unmaidenly. [Changing the subject.] How is dear Alfred?

Spreta.

Dear Alfred is tired, but perfectly transfigured by his trip. He has never once been away from me all these years. Only think!

Mopsa.

That would account for it certainly. And I really think he deserved some little outing. [With an outburst of joy.] Why, I shouldn’t wonder if he has positively finished his great big book while he has been away!

Spreta.

[With a half smile.] Shouldn’t you? I should.
But he has not mentioned it—perhaps he was too tired. And he has been trying to teach that miserable Little Mopsëman tricks ever since he came back. I never did care about dogs myself, and really Alfred is so perfectly absurd about him. Oh, here he is.

[Alfred Frûyseck enters, followed by Little Mopseman on his hind legs. Alfred is a weedy, thin-haired man of about thirty-five (or thirty-six) with tinted spectacles and limp side-whiskers. Mopseman wears a military tunic and a shako very much over one eye, and is shouldering a small toy musket. He is bandy-legged, with a broad black snout and beautiful intelligent eyes. His tail is drooping and has lost all its hair.]

Alfred.

[Beaming.] Just see what really wonderful progress Little Mopsëman has made already with his drill. Why, my dearest Mopsa! [Goes up and kisses her with marked pleasure.] You have come here the very morning after my return? Fancy that.

Mopsa.

[Gazes fixedly at him.] I couldn't keep away. You are looking quite splendid! And how have you got on with your wonderful large book, Alfred? I felt so sure it would go so easily when once you had got away from dear Spreta.

Alfred.

[Shrugging his shoulders.] It did—wonderfully easily. The truth is my thick fat book on Canine Idiosyncrasy—h'm—has gone—entirely out of my head. I have been trying thinking for a change. It's easier than writing.

Spreta.

Yes, Alfred, I can understand that. And then, when you had never really got farther than the title——!
ALFRED.

[Smiling at her.] No farther than that. Somehow, none of the Frøysecks ever do. My family is a thing apart. And now I have determined to devote my whole time to Little Mopsēman. I am going to foster all the noble germs in him, create a conscious happiness in his mind. [With enthusiasm.] That is my true vocation.

SPRETA.

You shouldn’t have dressed the poor dog up like that. It does make him look so utterly ridiculous!

ALFRED.

[Speaking lower and seriously.] Only in the eyes of the Philistines who couldn’t see any pathos in poor Mrs. Solness and her nine dolls. The truly reverent have no sense whatever of the ridiculous. Still, it would certainly be better in future to keep Little Mopsēman indoors, because if the dogs in the streets saw him in those clothes—[clenching his hands]—and after he has had that unfortunate accident to his tail, too!

Spreta.

Alfred, I won’t have you bringing up that again! There’s some one knocking. Come in.

The Varmint-Blôk.

[Enters softly and noiselessly. He is a slouching, sinister figure, in a fur cap and a flowered comforter. He has a large green gingham in one hand, and in the other a bag which writhes unpleasantly.] Humbly beg pardon, your worships, but you don’t happen to feel in the humour to see how this little wounded warrior here—[points to Mopseman]—would polish off the lovely little ratikins, do you?

Alfred.

[With suppressed indignation.] We most certainly do not. He is intended for higher things. Get out, you have frightened him under the sofa.
The Varmint-Blôk.

He'll come round right enough. . . . There, didn't I tell you! See how he sniffs at my legs. It's wonderful what a fancy dawgs do seem to take to me—follow me anywhere, they will. [With a chuckling laugh.] Seems as if they'd got to.

Spreta.

There is certainly no accounting— And what becomes of them when they do?

The Varmint-Blôk.

[With glittering eyes.] Oh, they're safe enough, the sweet little creatures, lady. I'm very kind to 'em. And if I could only induce you to let your lovely poodlekin tackle a dozen rats, which 'ud be a holiday to a game little sportin' dawg like him— Not this mornin'? then here's a loving good-day to you all, and thank ye kindly for nothing.

[He backs out cringingly, as Spreta retires to the verandah, fanning herself elegantly]
"He backs out cringly... Mopséman slips out after him."
LITTLE MOPSEMAN

with her pocket-handkerchief; Mopseman slips out after him, unnoticed by all.
Alfred sees Mopsa's portfolio.

Alfred.

[To Mopsa.] And have you positively lugged this thing all the way out here. Wasn't it heavy?

Mopsa.

[Nods.] It had to be. It contains all the letters written to my poor dear mother—by Master-builder Solness, you know. My mother had such a rich, beautiful past. I thought, Alfred, we might look them through together quietly some evening, when Spreta is out of the way.

[Looks attentively at him.

Alfred.

[Uneasily, to himself.] Oh, my good gracious! [Aloud.] It would certainly have to be some evening when—— But on the whole, perhaps, I—I really almost think we had better—— It isn’t as if you were really my second cousin!

Spreta.

[Re-entering from verandah.] Has that horrible person with the rats gone? He has given me almost a kind of turn.

Alfred.

He is a sort of itinerant Trope, I suppose. Talking of turns, did I tell you that I, too, have experienced a kind of inward revolution away up there among the peaks? . . . I have.

Spreta.

Oh, heavens! Alfred, was it the cookery at those high mountain hotels?

Alfred.

[Soothingly, patting her head.] Not altogether—be very sure of that. But it is rather a long story. I should recommend you to sit down. [They sit down expectantly.] I will try to tell you. [Gazing straight before him.] When I look back into the vague mists that enshroud my earliest infancy, I seem almost to——

Spreta.

[Slaps him.] Oh, for goodness' sake, Alfred, do skip the introduction!

Alfred.

[Disappointed.] It was the most interesting part! But the long and short of it is that I have resolved to renounce writing my wonderful work on Canine Idiosyncrasy! I am going to act it out instead—on Little Mopsēman. [With shining eyes.] I intend to perfect the rich possibilities that lie hidden in that rather unprepossessing poodle. There!

Spreta.

[Holding aloof from him.] And is that all?

Alfred.

I'm, yes, that's all. But you never did properly appreciate poor Little Mopsēman!
Mopsa.

[Pressing his hand.] She never did, Alfred. But I do. And we will teach him the loveliest new tricks together. • [Fixes her eyes on him.] Just you and I.

Spreta.

Alfred, I won't have the dog taught any tomfoolery. You shall not divide yourself up like that. Do you hear?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrāhn.

[Enters by the door.] Aha! so you've got your husband thoroughly in hand, as usual, eh, Mrs. Früyseck? [To the others.] I bring glorious news. I have just been called in to see to the Schoolhouse drains again! I only laid them last Autumn; but there seems to be a leakage somewhere. Quite a big piece of work, really!

Mopsa.

And are you beaming with joy over that?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrāhn.

I am indeed. And afterwards I have several important drains to disconnect at the great new hotel in Christiania, and the most tremendous scientific safeguards to grapple with and overthrow. What a glorious thing it is to be a plumber and make a little extra work for oneself in the world! Miss Mopsa, can I persuade you to to take a little turn in the garden? Do!

[Mopsa.]

[Offers his arm.] Mopsa.

[Takes it.] Oh, I don't mind—provided you don't talk shop or sentiment. [They go out together.

Spreta.

[Looks after them.] What a pity it is that Mopsa can't take more to that Mr. Blochdrähn, isn't it, Alfred? [Looks searchingly at him.

Alfred.

[Wriggles.] Oh—er—I don't know. For then we should see so much less of her.

Spreta.

[Veheemtnly.] Oh, come! So much the better!
[Clutching him round the neck.] I want you all to myself, Alfred. I love you so much I could throttle you. I've a good mind to, as it is!

ALFRED.

[Choking.] You are. My loyal, proud, true-hearted Spreta, d-don't! [Gently releases himself.

SPRETA.

You have ceased to care for me. Don't deny it, Alfred! [Bursts into convulsive weeping.

ALFRED.

I will frankly admit that, like most married Norwegians, I am—h'm—subject to the Law of Change.

SPRETA.

[With increasing excitement.] I saw that so plainly last night. I sent out for some champagne, Alfred, expressly for you. And you didn't drink a drop of it! [Looks bitterly at him.
LITTLE MOPSÉMAN

ALFRED.

I knew the brand. [With a gesture of repulsion.] Gooseberry, my dear, gooseberry.

SPRETA.

You never even kissed me, either. But you can kiss Mopsa! Alfred, if you imagine I am the kind of person to play gooseberry——

ALFRED.

Need dramatic dialogue descend to these sordid details? Really this is verging on mere vulgar loggerheads! And when you know, too, how I have always regarded Mopsa almost as a sort of sister!

SPRETA.

I know that sort of sister, Alfred. She comes from Norway! But I am none of your fish-blooded Mrs. Solnesses, or half-witted Beata Rosmers, and I'm not going to stand it! I decline to share you with anything or anybody—whether it's a thick fat book that never gets even begun, or a designing minx that helps you in your precious "vocation," or a gorging little mongrel, with his evil red and green eyes, that I'm often tempted to wish at the bottom of the fiord!

[Confused cries and barks are heard outside.]

Alfred.

[Shocked.] Spreta! When am I going to bring all his desires into harmony with his digestion! How unkind of you! [Looks for a moment.] What in the world are all the dogs barking at down there?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdæhn.

[Re-entering with Mopsa, by glass door.] Only some organ-grinder's monkey. They have just frightened it into the fiord. Such fun!

Alfred,

[In an agony of dread.] Can it be our Little——? But he is burying bones in the back garden. And he is not a monkey, either. And if he were, monkeys can all swim. ... What are they saying now? ... Hush!

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrän.

Leans over verandah railings. They say, “He is still shouldering the little musket!”

Alfred.

Almost paralysed. The little—it is Mopsēman! I taught him to do it so thoroughly! With outstretched arms. He cannot shoulder a musket and swim too! Glancing darkly at Spreta. Woman, you have your wish! Henceforth my life will be one long rankle of remorse! Sinks down in the armchair.

Mopsa.

With an affectionate expression in her eyes. Not alone, Alfred! We will rankle together—just you and I.

Alfred.

Rises half distracted. Oh my gracious goodness!

He rushes down into the garden.
THE SECOND ACT

A little narrow glen, with a slope in the background, belonging to Alfred. Under the dripping trees a table and chairs, all made of thin birchstaves. Everything is sodden with wet, and mist-wreaths are driving about. Alfred Früyseck, dressed in a black mackintosh, sits dejectedly on a chair. Presently Mopsa Brovik comes down the slope cautiously behind, and touches his shoulder; Alfred jumps.

Mopsa,

You shouldn't really sit about on damp seats in such miserable weather, Alfred. I have been hunting for you everywhere.

[Closing her umbrella with quiet significance.]
[To himself.] Run to earth! Oh, Lor'! [Aloud. If you would only be kind enough to search for Mopséman instead! I cannot unravel the mystery of his disappearance. There he was, just entering upon conscious intelligence—full of the infinite possibilities of performing poodlehood. I had charged myself with his education. After having been an usher at so many boarding-schools, I felt peculiarly fitted for such a task. And then a shady scoundrel has only to come his way with rats in a bag—

Mopsa.

But we don't in the least know how it really all came about.

Alfred.

That infernal Varmint-Blók is at the bottom of it, you may depend upon that! Though what motive in the world—[Quivering.] It's not as if Mopséman would ever have faced a rat. He used to bolt at the mere sight of a blackbeetle even. The whole thing is so utterly meaningless, Mopsa. And yet, I suppose the order of the universe requires it.

Mopsa.

Have you indulged in these abstruse philosophical speculations with Spreta?

Alfred.

[Shakes his head hopelessly.] She is so utterly incapable of——[Mopsa nods.] I prefer discussing them with you. There is something unnatural in imparting confidences to a mere wife. What on earth have you got there?

Mopsa.

[Takes a little housewife from her pocket.] Spreta said you had lost the button off the back of your collar. I thought I would sew it on for you. May I? [With quiet warmth.] I'll try not to run the needle into you.
Alfred.

[Absently.] Do; it may distract my thoughts a little. Where is Spreta, by the way?

Mopsa.

Only taking a little walk with Blochdrähn. [Sewing.] Perhaps it is hardly the weather for a stroll; but then he was always so perfectly devoted to—h'm—to Little Mopsēman, you know.

Alfred.

[Surprised.] But Spreta wasn't. She never liked him—not even as a puppy. And now tell me—don't you think you could take a fancy to Blochdrähn—h'm?

Mopsa.

Oh, no! please! [Covers her face with her hands. You mustn't really ask me why. [Looks at him through her fingers.] Because I know I should tell you; you have such an irresistible influence over me! Oh dear! oh dear! what will you think of me? [Moves close up to him.] There's a button off your shirt-front now!

Alfred.

[Plaintively.] Am I to have that one sewn on too?

Mopsa.

Yes, it's the right thing to do. Though how Spreta can let you go about like this, I can't think!

Alfred.

[With a half smile.] When I have you to look after me. This is quite like the dear old days!

Mopsa.

Yes. [Sewing.] I remembered I mended all your things, like a sister. Even then you never had quite all your buttons, had you, dear?

Alfred.

[Patting her head.] Not even then. And do you remember how you used to follow me about, just like a little dog? And I used to call you "Little Mopséman," because your name was Mopsa; and if I had had a dog I should have called him Little Mopsëman.
And then how you used to sit up and hold a biscuit on your nose, my dear faithful Mopsa!

Mopsa.

I wonder how you can be so childish! [Smiling involuntarily.] It was a rich beautiful time; but it was all over when you married. I hope you have never mentioned all that nonsense to Spreta?

Alfred.

I may have. One does tell one's wife some things —unintentionally. [Clutching his forehead.] But oh, how can I sit here and forget Little Mopsëman so completely? Have I no heart?

Mopsa.

If you have lost it, I think I know where it is.
And your must surely give you grief a rest occasionally, too.
Alfred.

I mustn't. I won't. I will think of him. . . . By the way, are we to have dried fish for dinner again? . . . Oh, there I go once more—in the very middle of my agony—just when I want to be torturing myself unspeakably with this gnawing crushing regret! What a wonderfully realistic touch it is, though, eh? So dramatic! But after all, I have you, Mopsa. I'm so glad of that!

Mopsa.

[Looking earnestly at him.] Surely you mean dear Spreta—not me, Alfred?

Alfred.

What relation is a wife to her husband? None whatever. Now you, Mopsa, you are very nearly a second cousin once removed, not quite—because our family is a thing so entirely apart. We have always had vowels (the very best vowels) for our initials, and the same coloured spectacles, and poor relations we invariably cut and great thick works we never get really on with. You take after your mother, Kaia.
LITTLE MOPSÉMAN

Mopsa.

And my aunt—she that was a Miss Rebecca West. I feel so irresistibly drawn to disturb other people's domestic harmony. But you must really forget me, and try to care for poor Spreta a little.

Alfred.

[Veheemtly.] It's no use. I can't. You've entranced me so thoroughly. [Helplessly.] I knew you would! Do let me remain here with you!

[Seizes her hand.

Mopsa.

[Looks warmly at him.] Of course, if you really mean that, I cannot pretend that such comradeship is—— Hush! let go my hand—there's somebody coming!

Spreta and Blochdrähn enter in waterproofs, sharing the same umbrella.
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN.

ALFRED.

[Annoyed.] Why do you come bothering here? Surely you must see that such an interruption is most ill-timed.

SPRETA.

[With a cutting laugh.] We did gather that, Alfred. I came to see what you were about.

ALFRED.

Mopsa was simply sympathising with me over Little Mopsëman's disappearance—that was all.

SPRETA.

Sympathising and philandering, Alfred, are synonymous terms in the Norwegian Drama. And I may be allowed to observe that other people can philander if they're driven to it. [Glances at Blochdrähn.

MOPSÄ.

[Taking her umbrella quickly, to Blochdrähn.] We seem to be somewhat de trop here. Suppose we withdraw?

[They do.]
LITTLE MOPSÉMAN

SPRETA.

Doesn't it strike you, Alfred, that all this morbid harping on that missing mongrel may be just a little monotonous—for a popular audience, I mean?

ALFRED.

[Gloomily.] They'll have to sit through another Act and a half of it—thats all. I shall harp if I choose. I like harping. And you always detested Mopséman. You said he ate too much, and had evil eyes.

SPRETA.

So he did—so he had! And you never really and truly loved him either, or you would never have made such a fool of the dog as you did!

ALFRED.

I had renounced my wonderful thick book. I needed something to fill up my life.

SPRETA.

You might have chosen something better than a miserable little poodle with no hair on his tail!
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

ALFRED.

[Turns pale.] It is you—you, who were the guilty one in that. [Harshly and coldly.] It was your hand that spilt the hot water over him as he lay comfortably on the hearthrug. It was! And you know it!

SPRETA.

[Terrified, yet defiant.] Better own at once that you came behind me and jogged my arm!

ALFRED.

[In suppressed desperation.] Yes, that is true. You looked so entrancingly beautiful as you were putting the kettle on for tea, that I was irresistibly impelled to kiss you!

SPRETA.

[Exasperated.] Alfred! This is intolerable of you. Do I deserve to be reproached for looking entrancingly beautiful?

ALFRED.

[With sarcasm.] Not in the least—now. You are subject to the Law of Change. But what does all that matter? We have both sinned, if you like.
While we had him, we both shrank in secret from him—we could not bear to see the tail he dragged about after him!

Spreta.

[Whispers.] You were so perpetually putting paraffin upon it, Alfred!

Alfred.

[Calmer.] Yes, that. I tried to perfect its possibilities. But it was no use—I could never, never make it good again. And after that I dressed him up in military uniform, and then he had to remain too much indoors, so, of course, he followed the Varmint-Blök, and then the street curs chevied him over the pier. And after I had trained him so thoroughly to shoulder a musket, he was so totally unable to swim. Oh, it all works out into quite a logical Retribution. And I must go away into the solitudes and writhe with remorse—by myself.
Spreta.

[Bitingly.] Unless, of course, you can induce Mopsa to—I think you mentioned once that she used to follow you about like a little dog?

Alfred.

[In a hollow voice.] I did. I remember now. That time when the tea-kettle—Retribution!

[He staggers into the thinnest birchstave chair, which collapses under him.

Spreta.

[Menacingly standing over him.] Yes, Alfred, Retribution! [Mopsa and Blochdrähn return.

Mopsa.

[Pleasantly.] Well, my dear Spreta, have you and dear Alfred talked things thoroughly out?

Spreta.

Oh, yes; quite thoroughly enough. I really will not be left alone with Alfred any more; he is too depressing!
"Yes, Alfred, Retribution!"
LITTLE MOPSÉMAN

ALFRED.

[On the ground.] One cannot be expected to rollick when one is being gnawed with remorse! But perhaps Blochdrähn would be a more cheerful companion for you; go on with him, while Mopsa helps me up again. We'll follow you—presently.

[Spreta and Blochdrähn go off together:
Mopsa tenderly assists Alfred to rise.

Mopsa.

Oh, dear me! it does seem such a pity! But Spreta always was peculiar. It must be so trying for you, dear!

ALFRED.

So much so that I can't stand her any longer. I must get away, anywhere—quite alone. Mopsa, will you come too?

Mopsa.

[Shocked.] Alfred! How can you? What have I said or done to encourage such a proposal? So utterly unexpected!
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

ALFRED.

[Feebly.] I really couldn't help it. It's the troll inside me. What am I saying? That belongs to another Norwegian drama!

MOPSA.

All this part belongs to several other Norwegian dramas, dear. But we must see if we can't get out of the old groove this time!

ALFRED.

But why in the world——? When you showed such a wonderful preference for my society, too!

MOPSA.

[Gently.] I know, dear. But that was before—— Let me tell you something. [Slow music; Alfred sits down, cautiously.] I've just been looking through my big portfolio, and I've discovered——what do you think? [Alfred shakes his head hopelessly.] I'm not Kaia's daughter at all, really. I'm only adopted!
But what difference does that make in our relations? Practically, none whatever!

Mopsa.

All the difference, Alfred. I always pursued you about with reluctance, and under protest. Being, as I supposed, descended from Kaia Fosli, and related to Rebecca West, it seemed so utterly the right thing to do. But I know now that I am nothing of the sort, and that if my real mother ever possessed such a thing as a Past at all, it was Plu-perfect. So heredity doesn't come in, and, rather than interfere between you and poor dear Spreta, I have decided to go right away and never see you again. I really mean it, this time!

[She opens her umbrella and runs off up the slope.

Alfred.

[Takes up his hat sadly.] Isn't this play going to end pessimistically after all, then? [Shudders.] Are we actually going to be—moral? [More hopefully.] After all, there's another Act left. There's a chance still!

[He follows hastily after Mopsa.]
An elevation and rockery in Früyseck's back-garden, from which—but for the houses in between—an extensive view over the steamer-pier and fiord could be obtained. In front, a summer-house, covered with creepers and wild earwigs. On a bench outside, Mopsa is sitting. She has the inevitable little travelling bag on a strap over her shoulder. Blochdrähn comes up in the dusk. He, too, has a travelling bag, made of straw, containing professional implements, over his shoulder. He is carrying a rolled up handbill and a small paste-pot.

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

[Catching sight of Mopsa's hand-bag.] So you really are off at last? So am I. I'm going by train.
Mopsa.

[With a faint smile.] Are you? Then I take the steamer. Have you seen Alfred anywhere about—or Spreta?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrän.

I have been seeing a good deal of Mrs. Früyseck. She asked me to come up here and paste one of these handbills on the summer-house. To offer a reward for Little Mopsēman, you know. I've been sticking them up everywhere. [Busied with the paste-pot.] But you'll see—he'll never turn up.

Mopsa.

[Sighing.] Poor Spreta! and oh, poor dear Alfred! I really don't know if I can have the heart to leave him.

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrän.

[Pasting up the bill.] I shall not believe it myself until I actually see you do it. But why shouldn't you come along with me, if you are going—h'm?
Mopsa.

If you were only a married man—but I have to be so careful now, you know!

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrahn.

It tortures me to think of our two handbags each taking its own way; it really does, Miss Mopsa. And then for me to have to plumb all by myself. Though, to be sure, one can always get round the district surveyor alone.

Mopsa.

Ah, yes, that you can surely manage alone.

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrahn.

But it takes two to connect the ventilating shaft with the main drainage.

Mopsa.

[Looking up at him.] Always two? Never more? Never many?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrahn.

Well, then, you see, it becomes quite a different matter—it cuts down the profits. But are you sure you can never make up your mind to share my great new job with me?

Mopsa.

I tried that once—with Alfred. It didn’t quite answer—though it was delightful, all the same.

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrāhn.

Then there really has been a bright and happy time in your life? I should never have suspected it!

Mopsa.

Oh, yes, you can’t think how amusing Alfred was in those days. When he distinguished himself by failing to pass his examinations, and then, from time to time, when he lost his post in some school or other; or when his big, bulky manuscripts were declined by some magazine—with thanks!

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrāhn.

Yes, I can quite see that such an existence must
"It takes two to connect the ventilating shaft with the main drainage."
have had its moments of quiet merriment. [Shaking his head.] But I don't see what in the world possessed Alfred to go and marry as he did.

Mopsa.

[With suppressed emotion.] The Law of Change. Our latest catchphrase, you know. Alfred is so subject to it. So will you be, some day or other!

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrahn.

Never in all my life; whatever progress may be made in sanitation! [Insistently.] Can't you really care for me?

Mopsa.

I might—[looking down]—if you have no objection to go halves with Alfred.

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrahn.

I am behind the times, I daresay; but such an arrangement does not strike me as a firm basis for a really happy home. I should certainly object to it, most decidedly.
Mopsa.

[Laughs bitterly.] What creatures of convention you men are, after all! [Rcollecting herself.] But I quite forgot. I am conventional myself now. You are perfectly right; it would be utterly irregular!

Alfred.

[Comes up the steps.] Is it you, Blochdrähn, who posted up that bill? On the new summer-house!

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

Yes, Mrs. Früyseck asked me to.

Alfred.

[Touched.] Then she does miss Little Mopsëman, after all! Are you going? Not without Mopsa?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

[Shaking his head.] I did invite her to accompany me, but she won't. So I must do my jobs alone.

Alfred.

It's so horrible to be alone; or not to be alone, if it comes to that! [Oppressed—to himself.] My troll is at it again! I shall press her to stay; I know I shall, and it will end in the usual way!

Spreta.

[Comes up the steps, plaintively.] It is unkind of you all to leave me alone like this. When I'm so nervous in the dark, too!

Mopsa.

[Tenderly.] But I must leave you, Spreta, dear. By the next steamer. That is—— Well, I really ought to!

Alfred.

[Almost inaudibly, hitting himself on the chest.] Down, you little beggar, down! No, it's no use; the troll will keep popping up! [Aloud.] Can't we persuade you, dear Mopsa? Do stay—just to keep Spreta company, you know!

Mopsa.

[As if struggling with herself.] Oh, I want to so much! I'd do anything to oblige dear Spreta
Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

[To himself, dejectedly.] She is just like that Miss Hilda Wangel for making herself so perfectly at home!

Spretä.

[Resignedly.] Oh, I don’t mind. After all, I would rather Alfred philandered than fretted and fuzzed here alone with me. You had better stay, and be our Little Mopsëman. It will keep Alfred quiet—and that’s something!

Mopsa.

No; it was only a temporary lapse. I keep on forgetting that I am no longer an emotional Cuckoo heroine. I am perfectly respectable; and I will prove it by leaving with Mr. Blochdrähn at once—if he will be so obliging as to escort me?

Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.

Delighted, my dear Miss Mopsa, at so unexpected a bit of good luck. We’ve only just time to catch the steamer,
Mopsa.

Then, thanks so much for a quite too delightful visit, Spreta. So sorry to have to run away like this! [To Alfred, with subdued anguish.] I am running away—from you! I entreat you not to follow me—not just yet, at any rate!

Alfred.

[Shrinking back.] Ah! [To himself.] If it depends upon our two trolls whether— [Mopsa goes off with Sanitary Engineer Blochdrähn.] There's the steamer, Spreta. . . . By Jove, they'll have a run for it! Look, she's putting in.

Spreta.

I daren't. The steamer has one red and one green eye—just like Mopséman's at mealtimes!

Alfred.

[Common-sensibly.] Only her lights, you know. She doesn't mean anything personal by it.
Spreta.

But they're actually mooring her by the very pier that—— How can they have the heart!

Alfred.

Steamboat companies have no feelings. Though why you should feel it so, when you positively loathed the dog.

Spreta.

After all, you weren't so particularly fond of him yourself; now were you, Alfred?

Alfred.

H'm, he was a decent dog enough—for a mongrel. I didn't mind him; now you did.

Spreta.

[Nods slowly.] There is a change in me now. I am easier to please. I could share you with the mangiest mongrel, if I were only quite sure you would never again want to follow that minx Mopsa, Alfred!
LITTLE MOPSEMAN

ALFRED.

I never said I did want to; though I can't answer for the troll. But I must go away somewhere; I'm such a depressing companion for you. I shall go away up into the solitudes—which reminds me of an anecdote I never told either you or Mopsa before. Sit down and I will tell it you.

SPRETA.

[Timidly.] Not the one about the night of terror you had on the mountains, Alfred, when you lost your way and couldn't find a policeman anywhere about the peaks? Because I've heard that—and I don't think I can stand it again.

ALFRED.

[Coldly and bitterly.] You see that I have really nothing to fill up my life with, when my own wife refuses to listen to my anecdotes! Now Mopsa always—— What is all that barking down there in the town?
Spreta.

[With an outburst.] Oh, you'll see, they've found Little Mopséman!

Alfred.

Not they. He'll never be found. Those handbills of yours were a mere waste of money. It is only the curs fighting in the street—as usual.

Spreta.

[Slowly, and with resolution.] Only that, Alfred. And do you know what I mean to do, as soon as you are away solitudinising up there in the mountain hotels? I will go down and bring all those poor neglected dogs home with me.

Alfred.

[Uneasily.] What—the whole lot of them, Spreta? [Shocked.] In our Little Mopséman's place!

Spreta.

[Firmly and decidedly.] Every one. To fill Little Mopséman’s place. They shall dig up his bones, lie on his mat, take it in turns to sleep in his basket. I will try to—h’m—lighten and ennoble their lot in life.

ALFRED.

[With growing uneasiness.] When you simply detest all dogs! I don’t know any one less fitted than you to manage a Dog’s Home. I really don’t!

SPRETA.

I must fill the void in my life somehow—if you go and leave me. And I must educate myself to understand dogs better, that’s all.

ALFRED.

Yes, that you would have to do. [As if struck with an idea.] Before you begin. Suppose I take up my big fat book on Canine Idiosyncrasy once more, eh? That would teach you how to purify and ennoble every poodle really scientifically, you know. Only you must promise to wait till I’ve got it done.
MR. PUNCH'S POCKET IBSEN

Spreta.

[With a melancholy smile.] I am in no hurry, Alfred. Only to write that you would have to remain at home.

Alfred.

[Half evasively.] Not necessarily. I might, of course—for a while, that is. But I shall have many a heavy day of work before me, Spreta, and you will see, now and then perhaps, a great slumberous peace descend on me as I toil away in my brown study—but I shall be making wonderful progress all the same.

Spreta.

I shall quite understand that, Alfred. Oh, dear, who in the world's this?

The Varmint-Blök appears mysteriously in the gloom.

The Varmint-Blök.

Excuse me, Captin, and your sweet ladyship, but I just happened to drop my eye on one of those lovely little hand-billikins here, and took the liberty to step up, thinking it might so happen that you'd been advertising the very identical dawg what followed me home the other day. You may remember me passing the remark how wonderful partial dawgs was to me. So I brought him up on the chance like.

[He produces Little Mopseman—in musti—from a side-pocket.

Spreta.

It is our Little Mopseman! So you are not some supernatural sort of shadowy symbol after all, then?

The Varment-Blok.

[Hurt.] Now I ask you, lady—do I look it? Here's my professional card. And if you should have the reward handy—[As Alfred pays him.] Five Rix dollarkins—correct, my lord, and thankee kindly. [As he departs.] You'll find I've learned that sweet little mongrel a thing or two; take the nonsense out of any rat in Norway now, he will.
And just you ask him to set up and give three cheers for Dr. Ibsen—that's all!

[He goes out, chuckling softly.]

ALFRED.

[Holding out Little Mopseman at arms' length.] H'm; it will be a heavy day's work to purify and ennoble this poodle after all he has been through, eh, Spreta? I think, as you seem to have developed quite a taste for such tasks, I shall allow you to undertake it—all by yourself.

SPRETA.

[Turns away with her half-teasing smile.] Thanks!

THE END.

MASTERPIECES OF GREEK SCULPTURE.
A SERIES OF ESSAYS ON THE HISTORY OF ART.

BY ADOLF FURTWÄNGLER.

Authorised Translation. Edited by Eugénie Sellers.

With 19 full-page and 200 text Illustrations. In One Volume.
4to, cloth, £3 3s. net.

* * * Also an édition de luxe on Japanese vellum, limited to 50 numbered copies. In Two Volumes, price £10 10s. net.

The TIMES.—"In very many ways the translation is an improvement on the original. We sincerely hope it will be read by English students in the Universities and elsewhere."

The ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Not alone students of archaeology, but artists, and collectors of choice books will revel in this sumptuous volume. The fine series of masterpieces of Greek sculpture here faultlessly reproduced is unequalled, whether in instructive arrangement or in perfection of the mechanical process. The illustrations are, almost without exception, photographically reproduced from the statues themselves (either the originals or casts), and we thus obtain the maximum of exact fidelity.

"But this is much more than a book of beautiful pictures: it is a critical study of the chief schools of Greek sculpture in its highest development by a scholar of acknowledged authority. No more suggestive or, to students, fascinating essays on Greek art have appeared for many years; nothing so comprehensive and at the same time so strictly first-hand has been achieved since the days of Winckleman, or at least K. O. Müller; though it is obvious that without the guiding influence of the late but ever-to-be lamented Brunn no such minute critical study would have been possible.

"Miss Sellers' edition is in every way a real improvement upon the original German edition of a year or two ago. She has rearranged the materials, and thus achieved a lucidity and continuity of argument which were much less conspicuous in the German."

The DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The fame of these masterly essays has grown in Germany since their first appearance to such a point that even in that country of learned rivalries they are admitted to be a paramount authority in their own sphere."
REMBRANDT:
SEVENTEEN OF HIS MASTERPIECES
FROM THE COLLECTION OF HIS PICTURES IN THE CASSEL GALLERY.

Reproduced in Photogravure by the Berlin Photographic Company.

With an Essay
By FREDERICK WEDMORE.

In large portfolio 27½ inches x 20 inches.

The first twenty-five impressions of each plate are numbered and signed, and of these only fourteen are for sale in England at the net price of Twenty Guineas the set. The price of the impressions after the first twenty-five is Twelve Guineas net, per set.

The TIMES.—"The renderings have been made with extreme care, and, printed as they are upon peculiarly soft Japanese paper, they recall in a remarkable way the richness and beauty of the originals."

REMBRANDT:
HIS LIFE, HIS WORK, AND HIS TIME.

BY ÉMILE MICHEL,
MEMBER OF THE INSTITUTE OF FRANCE.

TRANSLATED BY FLORENCE SIMMONDS.

EDITED AND PREFACED BY FREDERICK WEDMORE.

A re-issue in 16 Monthly Parts, price 2s. 6d. net, per Part.

A few copies of the FIRST EDITION are still on sale, price £2 2s. net; also of the EDITION DE LUXE (printed on Japanese vellum with India proof duplicates of the photogravures), price £12 12s. net.

The TIMES.—"This very sumptuous and beautiful book has long been expected by all students of Rembrandt, for M. Émile Michel, the chief French authority on the Dutch School of Painting, has been known to be engaged upon it for many years. . . . . Merely to look through the reproductions in M. Michel's book is enough to explain the passionate eagerness with which modern collectors carry on their search after Rembrandt's drawings, and the great prices which are paid for them."
COREA, OR CHO-SEN,
THE LAND OF THE MORNING CALM.
BY A. HENRY SAVAGE-LANDOR.

With 38 Illustrations from Drawings by the Author, and a Portrait.
Demy 8vo, 18s.

The Realm.—"Mr. Landor's book . . . is of extreme value, for he has used his eyes, his pen, and his brush to picture scenes and natural characteristics, which in all probability will be vastly modified by the events of the immediate years."

The Morning Post.—"The book contains a great deal of matter which is entirely new, and cannot fail to attract considerable attention at the present time, when so little is known about Corea and the Coreans."

CORRECTED IMPRESSIONS.
ESSAYS ON VICTORIAN WRITERS.
BY GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

The Times.—"He knows that in thirty years the general opinion has had time to clarify itself and to assimilate itself more or less to the more instructed opinion of the wise and the select. . . . From this point of view there is not a little to be said for Mr. Saintsbury's method; his application of it is . . . instructive."

DEGENERATION.
BY MAX NORDAU.

Translated from the Second Edition of the German work.
In One Volume, demy 8vo, 17s. net.

The Standard.—"A most suggestive, a most learned, and (may we add?) a most entertaining volume."

The Daily Chronicle.—"A powerful, trenchant, savage attack on all the leading literary and artistic idols of the time by a man of great intellectual power, immense range of knowledge, and the possessor of a lucid style. . . . This remarkable and stirring book, which is sure to be vehemently attacked, but which cannot be ignored."
Recent Publications.

MY PARIS NOTE-BOOK. By the Author of "An Englishman in Paris," In One Volume, demy 8vo. Price 14s.

The Daily Telegraph.—"One of those exceptionally delightful books the manifold fascinations of which it is difficult to exemplify by quotation."

Galignani's Messenger.—"Want of space forbids us to make further quotations from the good things in which the book abounds."

EDMUND AND JULIES DE GONCOURT. Letters and Leaves from their Journals. Selected. In Two Volumes, 8vo. With Eight Portraits, 32s.

THE STORY OF A THRONE. Catherine II. of Russia.

From the French of K. Waliszewski, Author of "The Romance of an Empress." With a Portrait. In Two Volumes, demy 8vo, 28s.

The Times.—"This book is based on the confessions of the Empress herself; it gives striking pictures of the condition of the contemporary Russia which she did so much to mould as well as to expand. . . . Few stories in history are more romantic than that of Catherine II. of Russia, with its mysterious incidents and thrilling episodes; few characters present more curious problems."

The Times.—“M. Gaulot’s work tells, with new and authentic details, the romantic story of Count Fersen’s devotion to Marie Antoinette, of his share in the celebrated Flight to Varennes and in many other well-known episodes of the unhappy Queen’s life.”

The Athenæum.—“A most interesting and valuable volume.”

The Academy.—“Written with great care and strict impartiality.”

The Great Educators.

A Series of Volumes by Eminent Writers, presenting in their entirety "A Biographical History of Education."

The Times.—"A Series of Monographs on 'The Great Educators' should prove of service to all who concern themselves with the history, theory, and practice of education."

The Speaker.—"There is a promising sound about the title of Mr. Heinemann's new series, 'The Great Educators.' It should help to allay the hunger and thirst for knowledge and culture of the vast multitude of young men and maidens which our educational system turns out yearly, provided at least with an appetite for instruction."

Each subject will form a complete volume, crown 8vo, 5s.

Now ready.

ARISTOTLE, and the Ancient Educational Ideals. By Thomas Davidson, M.A., LL.D.

The Times.—"A very readable sketch of a very interesting subject."

Saturday Review.—"Full of valuable information. If a school-master would learn how the education of the young can be carried on so as to confer real dignity on those engaged in it, we recommend him to read Mr. Hughes' book."

ALCUIN, and the Rise of the Christian Schools. By Professor Andrew F. West, Ph.D.

The Times.—"A valuable contribution, based upon original and independent study, to our knowledge of an obscure but important period in the history of European learning and education."

FROEBEL, and Education by Self-Activity. By H. Court-Hope Bowen, M.A.

The Scotsman.—"After a brief sketch of Froebel's career, Mr. Bowen deals exhaustively with his system of education."

ABELARD, and the Origin and Early History of Universities. By Jules Gabriel Compayré, Professor in the Faculty of Toulouse.

The Manchester Courier.—"The account of the general spirit and influence of the early universities are subjects scarcely less interesting than Abelard's own career, and are all capably treated by the author, who has throughout dealt with an important subject in a brilliant and able manner."

HERBART AND THE HERBARTIANS. By Prof. de Garmo.

The Saturday Review.—"Remarkably clear, and will certainly be of the greatest service to the English student of the history of education."

In preparation.

ROUSSEAU; and, Education according to Nature. By Paul H. Hanus.

HORACE MANN, and Public Education in the United States. By Nicholas Murray Butler, Ph.D.

The Pioneer Series.

12mo, cloth, 3s. net; or, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net.

The Athenæum.—"If this series keeps up to the present high level of interest, novel readers will have fresh cause for gratitude to Mr. Heinemann."

The Daily Telegraph.—"Mr. Heinemann’s genial nursery of up-to-date romance."

The Observer.—"The smart Pioneer Series."

The Manchester Courier.—"The Pioneer Series promises to be as original as many other of Mr. Heinemann’s ventures."

JOANNA TRAILL, SPINSTER. By Annie E. Holdsworth.

The Observer.—"Every word tells that it is the work of a true woman, who has thought deeply and lovingly on a most painful subject. . . . The picture is a beautiful one, which it would be well for many women to ponder over. In her claim for wider sympathy, a higher understanding of right and wrong, and her noble picture of woman helping woman, the authoress has done a good work."

GEORGE MANDEVILLE’S HUSBAND. By C. E. Raimond.

The Spectator.—"This very clever and terse story. . . . Mr. Raimond is undoubtedly an artist of great power. He certainly understands women’s distinctive graciousness and ungraciousness as few women of the advanced type appear to understand it."

The Pall Mall.—"Clever, biting, and irresistible."

THE WINGS OF ICARUS. By Laurence Alma Tadema.

The Daily Telegraph.—"An intensely pathetic tale of passionate love and ineffable self-sacrifice. . . . Nothing has been more impressively told in the pages of modern fiction than the dénouement of this sad but deeply fascinating story."

THE GREEN CARNATION. By R. S. Hichens.

The World.—"‘The Green Carnation’ is brimful of good things, and exceedingly clever. It is much more original, really, than its title implies. The character sketches are admirable and are probably drawn from the life."

The Observer.—"The book is a classic of its kind."

AN ALTAR OF EARTH. By Thymol Monk.

The Speaker.—"It is not merely clever, but pathetic and natural."

A STREET IN SUBURBIA. By E. W. Pugh.

THE NEW MOON. By C. E. Raimond.
